TRYON, N. C.

THURSDAY, JUNE 14TH, 1951

Weather Wednesday: high 85, low 64, rain 2.09, Hum. 70. . . Now is a good time for the Town of Tryon to repeal the ordinance against allowing dogs to run on the streets without a leash. It has never been enforced. And dogs are only taken when enough pressure is brought by mad dog scare or packs of dogs have ruined so many flower and vegetable gardens. Repeal of the ordinance will help the feelings of those conscientious people who don't want to break laws but yet don't feel it right for the officials to permit other people to violate them continuously. Repeal ordinance and then when we so and so's dog on the street without a leash everyone will know that a law is not being violated as far as being without a leash is concerned. . . . Mayor C. D. Stevens reports that the Council has ordered a more rigid enforcement of the one hour parking ordinance on Trade Street and that offenders who are caught continually parking over one hour, will be brought before the mayor's court for payment of fine and costs of action. . . . Tonight is the night of the regular duplicate bridge tournament at Congregational Church House at 7:45 Congratulations to The Asheville Times on its new type for headlines. It gives the

Livestock King Presented Rural America Picture

Jess Andrew, brother of Mrs. Edgar Rowe of Tryon was featured in the "Hello" story written by the American Meat Institute in several national magazines to acquaint the public with some of the members of "The Meat Team".

In honoring him recently his associates and friends presented him with a valuable picture of rural America, painted in oils in exchange for his hat. But since the hat was the nearest symbol to a crown for the King of Livestock men the hat was returned to him.

Mr. Andrew, who is president of the International Livestock Show in Chicago, first became a director of the show in 1913 and the owner of a new hat. He has clung to his old hat as a symbol and trademark for each of the succeeding shows. Part of the article is as follows: "Down on their farm in West Point, Indiana, Jess, Jess Jr., and Jess III specialize in turning grass and feed into better and better livestock . . . meatier type hogs, sheep and cattle. Jess somehow finds time to represent his county in the Indiana General Assembly and to occasionally help out folks at Purdue University with their livestock problems."
