$1,000 FINE TAXED AGAINST DEFENDANT

Clerk of Court Robert S. McFarland announced Monday that his office had collected nearly $10,000 in fines and costs, levied during the first week of court in Polk last week.

The largest fine of the first week, and the second largest during his long term of office, according to Mr. McFarland, was the $1,000 fine against Edward Mack Fowler, charged with violation of the prohibition laws.

Fowler originally was sentenced to two years on the roads by Judge Q. K. Nimocks, but the case was recalled Friday, and the sentence changed to a fine. Judge Nimocks said that since it was the first offense for Fowler, and because so many people had talked to him about the case, asking him to be more lenient, he decided to suspend the road sentence.

More than 160 cases were removed from the docket, which contained more than 250 cases when court opened August 24. There were 108 convictions, several found not guilty, some not pressed and about 20 were called and failed to appear for trial.

A total of 17 men lost their driver's licenses on drunken driving counts, and one youth lost his license on a second offense for speeding under a new North Carolina law passed by the last legislature.

Those losing their license for drunk driving or driving after license was revoked were Homer Arledge, George W. Crocker, Edward Bomar, Meride Edward Randolph, Arthur A. Thompson, Chas. Preston Alewine, Dalores Powell, Edward Fred Cochran, Jim T.
