

BUS COMPANY SHOULD DEAL WITH UNION

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has recommended that Carolina Scenic Stages negotiate with the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen as representing striking drivers.

The report was written by Eugene F. Frey, the Associated Press reported.

It recommended that the company cease dealing with employes individually in respect to pay, wages, hours and other conditions of employment.

The report also recommended that Carolina Scenic not interfere with employes in the exercise of their right of self-organization.

Bus drivers of the company went on strike last March, several months after Paul Stevens was appointed receiver in court action. Later, another court decision returned control to Hamish Turner, president.

Mr. Turner expanded operation of bus service by employing new drivers to replace those on strike.

Last week, control again was given to Mr. Stevens in a decision handed down by Federal Judge George Bell Timmerman Sr.—The Spartanburg Herald.
