Instant History

By Chuck Ross

Since 1980 is an election year, it might be well to learn a little painless, instant history by quizzing ourselves on each of the past forty-eight Presidential Elections. This is the second of our series — we hope you enjoyed the first. Don't let it bother you if you don't max these quizzes. We wouldn't be smart if we didn't have the book!

The Second Election — 1792

Washington and Adams were re-elected to second terms in the election of 1792. Washington was again elected unanimously, receiving all 132 electoral votes, but for Adams it was again a close contest. Try your luck on the following questions about our second Presidential election:

- (1) Who was Adams' chief rival for the Vice-Presidency, and what was the margin of votes?
- (2) Although there were no formal political parties at this time, there were two major opposing factions that functioned somewhat as parties. What were they called, what was their major difference, and who were their leaders?
- (3) Fifteen states took part in this election, five more than in the first. In addition to the original thirteen, what were the two new states?
- (4) In most of the states, electors were appointed by their legislatures. How were they chosen in North Carolina?
- (5) Who, besides Washington, received North Carolina's twelve electoral votes?

Answers

- (1) George Clinton, Governor of New York, 50 votes to Adams' 77.

(2) The Federalists, the "party" in power, believed in a strong central government; the Anti-Federalists wanted to diffuse power to the states and to the people. Washington was the titular head of the Federalists, and a strong President, but the two rivals, Adams and Hamilton wielded the political clout. Jefferson was the leader of the Anti-Federalists. His alliance with Clinton and Burr, a wedding of the rural South and the urban North, was to lead to the formation of a great political party — but more of this later.

(3) Vermont and Kentucky

(4) By popular vote.

(5) Clinton received all twelve votes for the second slot.

Resource Development Committee To Meet

MORGANTON — The Resource Development Committee of the Western North Carolina Health Systems Agency will discuss ways to encourage hospital pathology departments in the 26 western counties to report cancer information to the existing N. C. Registry during their meeting March 5 at the Community House.

This Registry is a system which records the number of cancer patients and medical treatment procedures used in individual cases. It is anticipated that the system will allow more effective treatment procedures for future cancer patients in western North Carolina.

Other agenda items include discussing budgetary increases for health departments in the 26 counties which would be necessary to provide screening, referral and a follow-up mechanism for diabetes, hypertension, heart disease, venereal disease and tuberculosis. The committee will also plan its participation in the schedule of events for the revision of the HSA's 1980-81 Health Systems Plan and Annual Implementation Plan.

The Resource Development Committee was formed in May, 1978 by the HSA's Governing Body for the purpose of implementing the Agency's AIP, a set of one-year objectives and actions to achieve goals in the Agency's five-year HSP.

The meeting will be held at 7:00 p.m. and is open to the public.
