Housecleaning? Look To Your Drycleaner For Help

Spruce-up sessions around the old homestead come at any time in modern days.

No longer a spring thing, down-to-the-bare bones cleaning can be prompted by an impending visit from a mother-in-law, a week with no other obligations, a plate of spaghetti hitting the diningroom floor or a sudden surge of energy.

Why not delegate some of the cleaning to a professional who is prepared to handle bulky items, delicate items or items that you may not know how to restore?

As you take stock of what is to be done during the cleaning session, make a list of what you can send out to be readied for a sparkling clean home.

The International Fabricare Institute (IFI), the global association of launderers and drycleaners, would like you to consider these fabric facts as you plan your cleaning itinerary:

Some materials used in home furnishings are deceivably fragile. Your drycleaner will recognize them and you should too before you try home remedies. Haitian or Indian cottons, for instance, are fabrics characterized by twisted yarns that give the appearance of hand-woven fabric; but they absorb dirt and stains, tear and are susceptible to large-scale shrinking and fraying. Indian cottons are often found in bedspreads, throws and decorator pillows. An IFI member will test these fabrics before cleaning to determine the best method.

Bed pillows deserve a night out. Your cleaning session should include professional restoration of pillows in addition to occasional airing out on the clothesline. Periodic special attention will add years to the lives of down-, blended feather- or synthetically-filled pillows.

Don't be fooled by the zippers on your sofa. Upholstery fabrics are not designed to be cleaned separately. Closures are solely for the furniture manufacturer's convenience when assembling the product.

Some upholstery is not made to be drycleaned at all! If you remove and send covers off to your drycleaner, those portions, with the dirt removed, may no longer match the fabric that is not removable. If your chairs or sofas need professional attention, best you call in an upholstery cleaner.

Draperies are a decorator's dream. Your draperies, probably one of the most attractive aspects of your home decor, deserve frequent attention-a vacuuming with the brush attachment, a tumble in your dryer, a cool evening hanging on the line-and an occasional beauty session with your drycleaner. For the most successful cleaning results, advise your cleaner of the fiber content.

In a quandary over your quilts? Unless you want to spend a weekend over the washtub, call in your cleaner for your quilts. Advise him of the fillings so he can tailor the cleaning method to the materials and return a bright, fresh room accessory.

Between cleanings—hang your quilts in the fresh air. Are you ready now for your bucket and scrub brush?
