Joe Hill In "The Rainmaker"

Joe Hill was in "The Rainmaker" presented by the Hilton Head Island Community Theatre. It ran for seven nights to a full house. A former Tryon Little Theater performer, Joe is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Hill of Columbus. His performance was praised by reviews in the Hilton Head News and the Island Packet.

"Joe Hill, who came to this play from "Philadelphia Story" and "Kiss Me Kate" gave a surprising performance. Coming from a role as a straight-laced young man in "Philadelphia Story", he knocked the socks off everybody as the rainmaker. A wild-eyed Hill, as Bill Starbuck, appears as the con man and dreamer, who breaths life into the Curry family. He is able to give hope to Lizzie, and the rest of the Curry household. — from the Hilton Head News

"Joe Hill, as Starbuck, the Rainmaker, bursts on stage at the end of Act I, and from that moment he is the catalyst for every member of the cast. His silver-iodide rhetoric cons the Curry family into paying $100 for the necessary rain, and Hill was so convincing in his glittering portrayal that, had the Curry family failed to come up with the cash, the audience would have passed the hat. His powerful performance had the marks of a veteran actor." — from The Island Packet
