

27 ATTEND BOONE
CBC BIRD MEETING

Members of the Tryon community composed over 30 percent of the 89 attending the spring meeting of the Carolina Bird Club held in Boone over the May 9-11 week-end. The CBC comprises bird watchers from both Carolinas.

Saturday morning and afternoon were devoted to a selection of bird walks near or adjacent to the Blue Ridge parkway in the Boone area, including the Cone and Price Memorial Parks. Ninety-two species of birds were observed.

Col. Norme Frost, as chairman of the Club's board of regents, presided over evening meetings on Friday and Saturday. The feature of the Saturday evening program was a slide projection produced by the Southern Appalachian Highlands Conservancy showing the famous "balds" of Roan mountain on the North Carolina-Tennessee border. Edward Schell of the Conservancy gave an introductory talk on the continuing efforts to preserve this unusual area.

Eleven birders from the Tryon area stayed over until Monday and visited the wildlife sanctuary maintained by the Carolina Nature Conservancy in the Bluff Mountain area near Jefferson, northeast of Boone, where a number of rare wildflowers were observed in bloom.

Attending from the local area were: from Tryon, Harry and Bunny Bates, Kenneth and Martha Frederiks, Norme and Betty Frost, Katherine Kirby, Ces and Beth Loveless, Betty Paterson, Betty Poteat, Hilda Safford, Bill and Carol Stoddard, Maria Stureke, Gwen Weidemann, Jane Walker and David and Kathy Wells; from Columbus, Graham and Helen Hagey; and from Landrum, Edward and Becky Delehanty, Ernest and Helen Kellogg and Neil and Margaret Skelton.
