Communication

Route 3, Box 88
Campobello, S.C. 29322
July 9, 1980

Dear Mr. Vining,

Ms. Dressler's recent communication in defense of conservatism is eloquent and well written. What many liberals fear, however, with the possible ascendancy of a conservative political regime is the loss or severe weakening of small hard-won gains in the fields of social legislation, civil rights, criminal justice, international dialogue and environmental matters. Many well known conservative political figures, in this region particularly, have dismal records on such issues.

When more of these men display real concern and propose definite programs to address these important problems, liberals may be easier to sell on the benefits of "limited government, fiscal responsibility, a free market" (with controls on troublesome imports?) "a stable economy, and a strong national defense" (with fiscal responsibility and lower taxes?)

Sincerely,

Dorothy D. McSwain
