

Family Tennis

Take several couples, two determined youngsters, a housewife who "always wanted to learn", add others anxious to improve their game, put them all together on the courts at the 4-H Fairgrounds in Columbus, and what do you have? Family tennis!

At first glance it would seem unlikely that this mixed assortment of abilities could fit a definition of "class", but thanks to the keen eye of Polk Central Coach Keith Crain, strengths and weaknesses were quickly assessed and each player assigned to group drill or to one of three volunteer coaches (John Nash, Dale Owens, George Finnie) for individual instruction. Monday evening's Family Tennis Tournament was the culmination of this approach to a game which has many would-be players giving up before they start.

The lineup of men featured Jack Wolters, Charles Soltis and Paul Culberson with Wolters the winner. Gayle Etherton, Joan

Soltis, Lois Wolters, Diane Guffey and Deborah Johnson began the ladies' contest, Etherton emerging the winner in a tie-breaker of 7-6 only to lose against Wolters. The most exciting match of the evening, spectators agreed, took place between Diane Guffey and Deborah Johnson. Guffey, whose son Brian is a regular member of the M-W-F morning tennis clinic for children, has made "amazing progress" according to her couple, and lost to Johnson only after a ferocious struggle. The finals are to be played this Thursday, the last day of the clinic, with a refreshment of homemade ice cream.

The Family Tennis Clinic is one of several sports clinics (free and open to the public) sponsored by the Polk County Community Schools. Says volunteer coach Dale Owens: "I really enjoyed teaching those people." — Reporter
