Got His Start With The Bulletin

GREENVILLE — Dr. William R. Hoots, Jr., professor and chairman of Graphic Arts in East Carolina University's School of Technology, is one of 20 educators chosen nationally to attend a two weeks' series of technical workshops and demonstrations in the art of painting.

The Workshop for Graphic Arts Teachers is scheduled Aug. 4-15 at Pittsburgh, sponsored by the Graphic Arts Technical Foundation and the American Association of Printing Equipment Manufacturers Inc.

Hoots said the workshop sessions will focus on rapid changes, advances and "really remarkable developments" in printing technology.

Hoots, a native of Hendersonville, N. C., began his "career" on the "world's smallest daily newspaper", the Tryon Bulletin at Tryon, N. C., working there part time while still in grammar school. His interest in printing increased while in vocational training in printing at Warren Wilson High School, Swannanoa, N. C.

He received his bachelor's and master's degrees at Western Carolina University and his PhD from Ohio State University.
