

enrollment card and bring a 4-H project. However, to really benefit from 4-H and have fun, it's best to belong to an organized club.

Is there a 4-H club in your neighborhood or community? If you aren't sure, check with some of the community leaders or long-time residents. If there is no club, you may find others who are interested in 4-H too, so that a community club may be organized.

Next, check with your local Agricultural Extension office. The number may be listed under county government, Agricultural Extension or 4-H. Ask for the Extension agent doing 4-H work.

The Extension agent can tell you where the closest 4-H club is, or can help you organize a project. The agent can tell you if such a project club is already organized.

Organizing a new club may be your best alternative, especially if others in your community seem interested. To do this, you'll need five or six youth ages 9-19, an adult leader and a meeting place. For convenience, many clubs meet in the leader's home.

Neighborhood 4-H clubs are ideal because the children can walk or ride bicycles to the meeting. There is a list of over 100 4-H projects available from your local Agricultural Extension office. These days 4-H has as much to offer city kids as rural kids, so check with your local Agricultural Extension office today.

4-Hers Are Involved...

Members of the Columbus Hearts 4-H Club typified the involvement of 4-H Clubs as they pitched in this year to assist in the clean-up campaign in Columbus.
