"Sky Events in November"

By Tim Linder

Now that Autumn has arrived the nights will be getting cooler and cooler temperatures mean clearer skies. Autumn and Winter skies are best for skygazing because the air in the upper atmosphere is less turbulent. In the Summer heat causes the air in the upper atmosphere to be unstable and stars viewed through the unstable air seem to swim and twinkle like crazy. In Winter when air is very stable the stars seem brighter and their light is steady. There will be a lot of very interesting events occurring in the sky during the next few months and the very clear Winter skies should make them appear more beautiful. Here's what's happening in the November skies:

NOVEMBER 1: This morning at about 6 a.m. the moon will pass about eight-tenths of a degree north of the star Regulus in the constellation of Leo. Look for the moon (just past first quarter) and Regulus very high in the east at the time of closest passage.

NOVEMBER 3: This morning before sunrise the planets Venus and Saturn will be about one degree apart. Look for these two planets high in the east at about 6 a.m.

NOVEMBER 7: New Moon. The moon is not visible today.

NOVEMBER 15: First Quarter Moon. The moon is now half full and is high in the south at sunset. Also this morning the planets Jupiter and Saturn will be three degrees apart. These two planets will stay within three degrees of each other for the next nine and a half months. On three occasions during this time Jupiter and Saturn will be only one degree apart. Jupiter and Saturn are now high in the east at sunrise.

NOVEMBER 16: This morning is the peak of the Leonid Meteor Shower. This shower is called the Leonids because the meteors radiate from the constellation of Leo. The best time to watch for Leonid meteors will be after about 4 a.m. Leo will be high in the east by sunrise and about 15 meteors per hour may be seen.

NOVEMBER 22: Full Moon. Tonight the moon is fully lit and rises at sunset.

NOVEMBER 29: Last Quarter Moon. The moon is now in the morning sky and is high in the south at sunrise.

That's it for this week. HAPPY STARGAZING!!!!!!
