American Cars Are Safer

Imported subcompact cars continue to have the worst accident claims records, according to a new insurance industry report.

Compared with the imported cars, the U. S. made intermediates, especially four-door models and station wagons, have the best safety record and fewer crash-related injury claims, according to the Highway Loss Data Institute.

The institute receives claims data from insurance companies and analyzes it. The information released recently dealt with claims filed by owners and occupants of 1977 through 1979 models.

Of the 24 cars with the best injury claims, all were made in the United States and 16 were built by General Motors, the institute reported.

No imported subcompacts of compacts were on the listing of best performers. — Reporter

Memo:

Often we receive enquiries regarding unusual property on and above Lake Lanier and more often than not we have to say, "Sorry it is not available today." Well, right now we can tell you about an especially charming "year round" home that is bound to appeal to you and it can be purchased today. On the main floor there is a living room with fireplace, dining area, kitchen, closed-in porch and screened-in porch, two bedrooms and two baths. There is a large upstairs bedroom that connects with an intriguing deck. The downstairs really caters to the imagination! It now includes a laundry, storage room and shop. (further possibilities for the extra space galore). The large yard is nicely landscaped and if you enjoy vacationing at home there is a delightful dock on the waterfront. If you take over this desirable home you will probably never want to move again.
