

Polk Foundation Reaches Out

Several of the grants made by The Polk County Community Foundation reach out of the actual geographical area of Polk County to help organizations open to use by Polk County residents.

A grant this year went to the Piedmont Council of Boy Scouts of America. The Council is building a new camp in Rutherford County, having outgrown the one on Lake Lanier, and this grant will help.

The Polk Foundation, in a previous grant, bought aquatic equipment for the Scouts, which will go along with the move.

A 1978 grant went to the City of Landrum to buy equipment for Landrum's recreational program, which serves Polk County residents as well as their South Carolina neighbors.

In 1977, a grant went to complete the Tryon rooms at Duke Hospital's Cancer Center, often used by Polk County residents. These rooms provide a touch of home.

Does the Better Business Bureau sound like a strange recipient for a grant from The Polk Foundation?

Actually, the money went to the Western North Carolina Educational Foundation of the BBB. It provided kits and visual aids for seniors at Polk Central and Tryon High Schools, about to go out into the competitive world. These provided information on money management, especially geared to young people, and a boost for the private enterprise system. — Reporter
