DIVIDENDS AND INTEREST

Question: My savings account of $10,000 earned just over $650 in interest last year. I did not withdraw any of the interest nor did I have the bank enter the $650 in my savings account passbook. Do I have to pay tax on the interest?

Answer: Yes. The fact that interest is not actually removed from the savings account or entered in a passbook, will not render the interest nontaxable. The doctrine of "constructive receipt" requires that both cash and accrual basis taxpayers report any income credited or made available without restriction during the year. Interest is considered constructively received as it is earned, not when withdrawn or entered in a passbook. — Another service of H & R Block, the Income Tax People.
