Weather Thursday: high 82, low 64, humidity 40%. Friday was a beautiful sunny day, but what we need is rain, rain, rain.

Worsening water shortages in the South could force the federal governments to enforce conservation of underground water supplies, according to Gene D. Sullivan, an economist with the Federal Bank in Atlanta.

The risk of fatal heat stroke to college and high school football players in hot weather workouts can be eliminated if coaches take certain precautions, according to two Temple University researchers. The most critical consideration is an individual player's size, with linemen — the gibber, bulkier player — most susceptible to heat stroke. They urge coaches to go easy on players during the first few days of pre-season practice, making sure that players drink enough water and remove helmets during breaks.

Rabid Bat Found Here

A rabid bat was found here last week. But before our readers get too excited, Eddie Burgess of the Animal Control District Health Dept. of Rutherford-Polk-McDowell, stated Friday that one out of every 6 or 7 bats is rabid.

But back to our story. Last Tuesday a bat flew in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Brewer opposite the Tryon Seventh-day Adventist Church. (former Thatcher home, now owned by John Washburn). Mrs. Brewer (Stacy Ayers) stated that the bat fell off a ledge and stayed in a corner and didn't move. She said that she had read somewhere that if a bat didn't move it was probably sick and had rabies, so she called Dr. Terry Staggs in Landrum. He told her that if it was possible to kill the bat without damaging its head and place it in a container and send it to the Health Department.

Her brother-in-law, Tom Howard, put on a pair of leather gloves and took a broom and held the bat down while her husband used a flashlight to shine on the bat. They scooped it into a plastic freezer container where it couldn't get any air and took it to the Spartanburg County Health Dept. The report came back Friday that the bat had rabies.

The main danger of a rabbit bat is that an animal, particularly a cat, would attempt to play with it and get rabies. Not only should your dog be vaccinated for rabies, but also your cat.
