A Foot Stomper

By Eugene Warner

Carol and Hunt Mallett, will expand their Blue Ridge Serenaders country program for their second appearance Saturday at 8 p.m. at the Barn Door in Landrum.

The Serenaders intersperse square dances with mountain songs - duets, trios, solos. quartets, with instrumental numbers by the musicians who do their stuff singly or in groups, on guitars. fiddles, banjos, mandolins and bass.

Saturday it will be a dance-andconcert-and-dance-lessons.

Hunt Mallett, who calls the dances, and his wife, Carol, will demonstrate the different dance steps so those in the audience who don't know the steps or have never tried them can learn how to become laughing, swinging, genuine rambunctious country whompers and stompers.

In their first appearance at the Barn Door, Dec. 12 the Serenaders observed many in the crowd seemed to enjoy watching the dances as much as essaying some hoofing of their own.

The music, the enthusiasm of the forty or fifty people on the floor dancing in the patterns and formations shouted by the caller, laughing people whirling, twirling, skirts swishing, men's feet stomping, provided a jolly entertainment for spectators and dancers alike.
