Polk County and other Western North Carolina areas anticipate a major economic spin-off from BMW's decision to build its first U.S. plant in the Spartanburg area.

Area business, government and community leaders point to the importance of the immediate development and implementation of a county-wide land-use plan to prepare for whatever growth, residential or otherwise, that Polk County will experience as a result of BMW's new plant locating nearby.

Polk County is presently developing such a land-use plan with the help of the Isothermal Planning and Development Commission through a land-use planning grant. The final plan will be a joint effort of the Polk County Commissioners, the Economic Development Commission and the Planning and Zoning Board.

Polk County's land-use planning project is coming at the right time in order for Polk County to benefit substantially by BMW's announcement Tuesday, said Charles Neff, President of the Tryon/Thermal Belt Chamber of Commerce and a member of the Polk County Economic Development Commission.

"The sign ordinance and land-use planning are so much more important now than ever,"
