HOW THE BOLL WEEVIL FEEDS

When the weevil come out of their winter quarters they quickly fly to the nearest cotton, upon which they begin to feed. The feeding may take place on the seed leaves or the regular leaves if any have developed. The insects are usually in the extreme tip of the plant. If feeding happens to take place at the point where the two seed leaves branch the plant frequently dies but feeding elsewhere has little effect on the growth of the plant. Feeding continues in these places until squares appear. Then the principal food is the squares. As long as the plants have an abundance of squares which have not been punctured the developing bolls are practically free of injury, but the increase in the number of weevils in the field and the puncturing of a majority of the squares the insects begin attacking bolls.

It is necessary for the female weevils to obtain food from the squares before they are able to develop eggs. As long as they have nothing but leaves to eat as is the case very early in the spring they show no tendency to lay eggs.

After beginning to lay eggs the female weevil obtains practically all of its food while it is gnawing holes in the squares in which to place eggs. The male weevil, however, remains on a square for some time puncturing it over and over until it begins to become dry.

Weevils regularly take moisture from dew or rain drops on the leaves and other parts of the plants.

The first sign of the injury of cotton squares by weevils is what is called flaring. This is the spreading outward of the three leaf-like divisions of the shuck enclosing the square. At about the same time that the square flares it turns yellow in color. These flaring and discolored squares are easily seen in the field. How soon flaring occurs depends on the size of the square and the climatic conditions. Sometimes it takes place overnight but generally not for two or three days after the egg has been placed in the square. Practically all squares which have been fed upon or have eggs placed in them drop to the ground. Usually it is about a week from the time a square receives an egg until it falls.

In tests in cages it has been found that the weevil greatly prefers Sea Island or Egyptian cotton to any of the upland American varieties but among the latter no special choice is shown. The greater yields from some varieties under boll weevil conditions are due to more rapid fruiting.

The boll weevil is sometimes found on plants other than cotton. It is often observed in Okra blooms. It has never been found placing eggs in okra pods and efforts to force it to do so have failed. In one laboratory experiment a weevil developed in the bud of a wild plant related to cotton but in thousands of observations in the running though years no cases have been found of the development of the weevil in any plant other than cotton.

When placed in bottles the weevils will feed on various fruits but this is only due to starvation and probably never occurs under natural conditions.

The North Carolina Board of Examiners of Trained Nurses will hold examinations May 22-23 and 24 in Winston-Salem at the Robert E. Lee hotel.

A fruit grower of Transylvania county aided by an agricultural extension worker in spraying his apples last season, sold his sprayed fruit for double the amount received for that which was unsprayed. He now has 200 bearing trees that he recently requested County Agent Lewis A. Ammon to help him spray. "It pays" he said.

Look what we do in North Carolina!

In introducing ourselves to strange people in far-away states, in asking them to insure their lives with a North Carolina company, there is vast satisfaction in pointing to our record in our Home State, where, among neighbors and friends, we have been known intimately and our progress has been watched closely, from birth to date.

We say to them—"Look what we do in North Carolina."

"Jefferson Standard wrote in 1923 on North Carolinians over $17,000,000 of insurance—more than was written here by any other Life Insurance Company in the world.

"Jefferson Standard insurance in force in North Carolina exceeds $81,000,000—more than has been placed here by any other Life Insurance Company in the world.

"There are over 38,000 Jefferson Standard policyholders in North Carolina alone."

Climbing

In a short seventeen years, the Jefferson Standard Life has taken its place right at the top with the best Life Insurance Companies in America.

Without the confidence and support of the Old Home State, we could not have gone so fast nor so far. We show our appreciation of this faith by investing your money largely in North Carolina, which helps our state, its people and your company.
