CARTER P. JOHNSON, M. D., Prof. of Anatomy and Physiology.

DAVID H. TUCKER, Prof. of Theory and Practice of Medicine.

ARTHUR E. PATICOLLAS, M. D., Demonstrator of Anatomy.

The study of practical Anatomy may be prosecuted with the most ample facilities, and at very trifling expense.

Clinical Lectures are regularly given at the College Infirmary and Richmond Almshouse.

The same room with the College and subject to the entire control of the Faculty, is at all times well fitted with medical and surgical cases, and furnished with facilities for clinical instruction.

Many surgical operations are performed in presence of the class; and the students being freely admitted to the wards, enjoy, under the guidance of the Professor, unusual opportunities for becoming familiar with the symptoms, diagnosis, and treatment of disease.

EXPENSES.—Matriculation fee, $5. Professors' fees, $105. Demonstrator's fee, $10. Graduation fee, $25.

The price of board, including fuel, lights and servants' attendance, is usually $3 or $4 per week.

The catalogue &c., containing fuller information concerning the institution, will be forwarded to those applying for it, or specific inquiries will be answered by letter.

Address, S. MAUPIN, M. D., Dean of the Faculty, 561-4f.

RACING SUBSCRIPTION OFFICE, 19 Park Place, New York.

THE Proprietors beg to announce that they have opened Classes for Sweepstakes, upon the system which has obtained a large share of the public support in England and elsewhere.

By extending as it does to the public at large, the interest otherwise felt by only a few in RACING EXCURSIONS, and enabling all, whether content with sporting matters or not, to participate in the chance of gaining a large sum, by the result of proportionally a small Risk!

As will be seen by the subjoined Scheme, the subscriber in Class A, may for ONE DOLLAR, gain $5,000.

The Sweepstakes now open consist of five Classes for the Great Yorkshire Stakes, to be run at York, (England) 23d August, 1850—164 Horses entered.

FIRST HORSE, $50,000.

Second, 25,000. Third, 12,500. Fourth, 6,250. Fifth, 3,125.

From the Mobile Tribune. Come back, John. You know I told you once, John, I'd never write again—

I own that I was vexed. And thought if I was cold John, That you would be perplexed.

You flirted so with Sall, John, I own that I was vexed. And thought if I was cold John, That you would be perplexed.

I find it will not do, John— You can't be moved by frowns— Alas! that lovers true, John, Should have such "ups and downs."

You loved me fondly once, John, You often told me so. I own I was a dunce, John, Such pertulance to show.

I offer you the hand, John, So often clasped in thine. O, let us pledge anew, John, The memories of "lang syne."

It is the gentle spring, John, When buds and flowers make love; And like a radiant queen, John, Pale Cynthia walks above.

In seasons like to this, John, Kindred for kindred pine— O, then complete my bliss, John, Exchange thy heart for mine.

Your affectionate POLLY M. P. S.—O, come and see me soon, John. My heart's breaking so— Else I shall surely swoon, John, Or fall in love with Joe. P. M.

Curiosity Rewarded. The other day a friend of ours, who though rather smart, in the popular acceptance of the term, is decidedly vain of his personal appearance, was standing at the steps of the St. Charles Hotel, intently watching the motions of two elegantly dressed ladies, who at the moment were passing up the street.

After watching them for some time, until they disappeared in the distance, he turned round and addressed an acquaintance standing near, asking him if he knew the handsome ladies who had just attracted the attention of a number of admiring gentlemen who were then, it was the dinner hour, congregated in the vicinity.

"Know them! of course I do," replied the person addressed.

"What are their names?"

"They are the Misses —, and by the way, very fine girls they are, and fortunes too."

"Can't you introduce a friend?" asked the first speaker.

"Well," said the other, "I don't know that I mightn't; particularly as I have heard them speak of you. They said you were a remarkably good looking fellow."

"No! really now! did they! I declare you quite flatter my vanity," said our friend, straightening himself a little, giving his shirt collar a little more altitude, and then twisting his delicate moustache with his gloved fingers. "Did they say anything more?"

"Oh! yes, they said a good deal, but I don't think I can tell you the rest; it would be a violation of confidence, you know, and I am sure they would never forgive me, if they should find out that I had betrayed them. Such things should be kept sacred, you know."

This excuse did not by any means satisfy our friend. In fact, as was always the case when he himself was in question, his curiosity was aroused; he was anxious to know what the ladies had said about him; he couldn't rest till he found out; he coaxed, he persuaded, he solicited, but all in vain, the obstinate disturber of his peace would not give any satisfaction.

At last, after exhausting every expedient to extract the desired information, our friend invited his companion to take a drink, then a second, and a third, and finally the good sounded for dinner and found his curiosity gratified. Seizing his obstinate tormentor by the arm, the inquisitive individual said, "Come, Tom, let's go to dinner, and we'll discuss the matter over some fine champagne."

"With all my heart. I never feared a good offer, and as I know the quality of Mudge & Wilson's champagne, I don't think I can let this opportunity slip."

Up stairs they accordingly went, and seated at the dinner table the cross question was put in operation with redoubled vigor. Claret and Burgundy, and Champagne were ordered; the most delicate dishes were placed before the possessor of the precious information. But all the temptations failed. He would not tell. He could not sacrifice his honor by disclosing a private conversation; besides it might have a bad effect, and in short, it was altogether impossible. Our friend, however, was not to be discomfited in this way; he continued his attentions and his persecutions till the cloth was removed, till the dessert was placed on the table and demolished, and till at last he and his companion were the only persons remaining. Finally the latter arose, sauntered to the door, and stepped out on the capacious portico, where, tooth-pick in hand, he took a seat in order that he might quietly enjoy the remembrance of his fine dinner. Our friend, though, was not disposed to let the matter drop; he drew up a chair, deliberately sat down and expressed his fixed determination not to stir till he had found out what those ladies had said about him.

"Well," said the other, "if you are resolved I might as well tell you; though I couldn't have done so before, for fear of spoiling your appetite. Those ladies said that you were a fine looking fellow, and I had to agree with them in that."

"Well, well; what then?" You told me that before."

"Well, in the next place they said it was a pity you were good looking, for you were the greatest simpleton they ever knew."

On hearing this reply our friend rose from his seat, bowed politely, remembered that he had an appointment at precisely that hour, and retired precipitately. He was not seen about the St. Charles before dinner for some time afterwards.

The reason we leave the reader to judge.—V. O. Picaque.

THE MECHANICAL LABOR ON A NEWSPAPER.—Few persons have any idea of the vast amount of mechanical labor, independent of the mental exertion, which is required in the production of a newspaper. The London Times with its mammoth supplement has 72 closely printed columns, which contain 17,500 lines, made up of more than a million pieces of type. Thirty-four thousand copies of this paper and supplement have been printed in about four hours. The greatest number ever printed in one day was 54,000, and the paper used weighed seven tons, the usual weight being four and a half tons. The surface printed every night (with a single supplement) is thirty acres, the weight of type in constant use is seven tons, and 110 compositors and 25 pressmen are constantly employed.—Scientific American.

ROBERT FULTON.—A correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer, speaking of the ocean steamers, relates an incident in the history of steam, which possesses no little interest. He thus tells it:

"A gentleman, now an honored representative of one of the Congressional Districts of New Jersey, visited Robert Fulton when he was in Paris. The man whose genius has made a new era in civilization, occupied a small and obscure room.—The embodiment of the expansive power of steam was confined within very narrow limits. Like Diogenes in his tub, Fulton was almost lodged in the circumference of a cylinder. On the wall of his habitation was sketched coarsely, but distinctly, the plan of a steamboat.—'There,' said Fulton, as he pointed it out to his visitor, 'there is the image of what will yet traverse the river and ocean.'"

"And wherever he went, this image of the future was carried with him. If he did not sketch it on the wall, it was written in his mind. He saw it as he walked along; he thought of it; he dreamed of it; and, at last, he acted on it. The taper of his lone room illumined the world."

"I recollect the distinct emphasis, which Mr. Clay gave to the words, when conversing respecting the many memorable and wonderful men who were given to the world in the year 1769—Napoleon, Wellington, Clinton, Fulton—And the greatest of these was Fulton," said he. It was truly said, and the world almost, even now acknowledge it.

EARLY DAYS OF NAPOLEON.—There, in his History of the Consulate, relates some very strange and previously unknown particulars respecting the early life and penury of Napoleon Bonaparte. It appears that after he had obtained a subaltern's commission in the French service, and after he had done the State good service by his skill and daring at Toulon, he lived for some time in obscure lodgings and in such extreme poverty that he was often without the means of paying ten sous for his dinner, and frequently went without any meal at all. He was under the necessity of borrowing small sums, and even worn-out clothes from his acquaintances! He and his brother Louis, afterwards King of Holland, had at one time only one coat between them, so the brothers could only go out alternately, turn and turn about. At this crisis the chief benefactor of the future emperor and conqueror "at whose mighty name the world grew pale," was the actor Talma, who often gave him food and money. Napoleon's face, afterwards so famed for its classic mould, was, during this period of starvation, harsh and angular in its lines, with projecting cheek bones. His meagre fare brought on an unpleasant and unsightly cutaneous disease, of a type so virulent and malignant, that it took all the skill and assiduity of the accomplished physician Corvisart, to expel it after a duration of more than ten years. The squallid began then, the splendid emperor afterward—the thread-bare habitant, the imperial mantle—the hotel and the palace—the meagre food and the gorgeous banquet—the friendship of a poor actor, the homage and error of the world—an exile and a prisoner—such are the ups and downs of this changeable life, such the lights and shadows of the great and mighty.

THE QUEEN OF ENGLAND.—The income of the Queen of England is half a million pounds sterling—$2,500,000. From this £200,000 is taken to pay what is called the household, which consists of the great officers of the State, such as Lord Chamberlain, &c. The Queen has seven or eight palaces; but then she pays no taxes.—When the Queen goes in state, the procession consists of the Life Guards in half armor; three of the royal carriages with four horses each, having the great officers of state in them; then the corps of Yeomen of the Guard, dressed in the costume of the time of King Henry the Eighth, with long habets in their hands; after these are forty footmen, in liveries of red, literally covered with gold, then the marshal porters, also gaudily dressed. The state carriage is drawn by eight cream-colored horses, in scarlet morocco leather harness, thickly studded with gold. The Queen is generally accompanied by Prince Albert, the principal lady of the bed-chamber, and the Duke of Wellington, carrying the sword of state.—She wears upon this occasion a coronet of brilliants, and diamonds of immense value upon her dress, which is of the richest materials, and over her shoulders she has a crimson velvet mantle, lined with ermine and richly embroidered with gold.

The Queen has 330 domestic servants, 110 of whom wear the royal livery of scarlet and gold. At a royal banquet the whole dinner service is of gold.

SWIMMING EXTRAORDINARY.—We yesterday had the pleasure of witnessing an athletic feat, equal, we believe, to that performed by the love-sick youth of Abydos; for our Leander had, we presume, no amorous Yankee priestess to swim after. A young man named Clinton Jackson swam across the Niagara river under the Falls and back again without landing to take breath, merely touching land on the other side. To those acquainted with the Niagara Falls, and aware of the muscle required to get the ferry boat from side to side, it is unnecessary to explain that, though the river at this point is not more than a quarter of a mile broad, yet the most lusty swimmer, from the immense strength of the current against which he has to struggle, is unable to gain the opposite shore under three quarters of a mile. It is, therefore, no small undertaking to swim a mile and a half in the most rapid river in the world; with a certain knowledge that a camp or faint-heartedness would in a few minutes carry you into the rapids below, where the river is supposed to travel twenty-eight miles an hour, there to be dashed to pieces on the rocks, or to be "sucked in" the famous whirlpool. Jackson performed the feat without difficulty, keeping his head and neck above water during the whole time, and turned on his back.—St. Cath. Jour.
