attend to,"

"Well, do you know when we're agoin to start ?"

"We ; who the devil do you mean ?" "Oh pshaw, now! You're a foolin me! Don't you know that ar Company with blue coats and yaller trimmins."

"For mercy sake, tell me what Regiment you belong to."

"Regiment-no, I don't belong thar-1 belong to Knoxville in Tennessee.

The Captain bit his lip until the blood almost burst through, and turned upon his heel, and the Tennesseean had to learn "when weare to go" from some other quarter. On another occasion, the Captain received an order from Head Quarters, just about the time that Gen. Worth's division was crossing the Ban Juan, to attend with all haste to some most important business. His office was literally thronged with clerks, as:istants, and the fiend confusion seemed to be holding his first levee. Buzz, buzz, chatter, chatter in the inside, and any quantity of mulcs, Mexicans, and cadaverous-looking soldiers on the outside.

"Let me in - let me in !" bawled a squabby-looking warrior, with his clothes covered with dust. Some thought that Gen. Taylor had been assassinated; others that General Worth's division had been surprised ; whilst a few suggested that the small-pox might have broken out in the camp. "Captin,,' said the intruder, as soon as he could get breath, "that ar d-d cuss, Jim Sykes, has housed my ramrod, and"---

"Sergeant, take that man out, and if he comes here again, put him in the guardhouse.'

"But that ain't all; he broke the handle shote off my fryin' pan, and then said it was only a little bent !

The Captain ran his hands through his hair, as though he wished to rake out some very oppleasant thoughts, and then again resumed his multitudinous labors. In about half an hour after this scene, the identical individand who had been so unceremoniously ejected, sushed in again, better than ever, and apparently on the very verge of madness .---Throwing his hat on the floor, he shrieked, "Captin, Captin, I can't stand it! I'll quit the army-that d-d Jim Sykes has stole my bridle-1 seed it on him : he's made leather suspenders of it : and then he marked down my hosses ribs with yaller paint-and"

In about two minutes after this, Capt. C was riding, at full gallop, towards General Taylor's quarters, no doubt bestowing any but charitable benedictions on the malicious Jim Sykes, and his unfortunate victim.

The very last curiosity we have seen spok en of in the papers is " a wheel that came off a dog's tail when it was a waggin." The man that sent it in has retired entirely from public life.

ourselves, they had seen what they believed to be the extent of old Blunt's funds, and as they could, between the three, form a jointstock purse of some $300,000, besides some odd change for by-play, they determined that he with the ambrosial curls should bluff him out of it.

The cards were introduced, and in a few minutes old Blunt found himsell at a table with his three bar-made acquaintances. The game, it was souled, was to be twenty-deck poker-the stakes four bits, anti without limit. They played for some time, with in different success, till the pre-arranged crisis arrived. The locomotive jewellery store dealt he gave old Blunt four tens and a king to bring him out—to, himself be gave four aces and a jack. Blunt went five dollars, the two aids passed, and the gentleman with the jewellery naw old Blunts fire and went ten better-money out, be it remembered, all the time. Without following them in their respective " bluffs," soffice it to suy, that when the gentleman of sombre understand. ing saw old Blunt's $15,000 on the table, he went that and $15.000 better ! Old Blunt affected to be nonplussed ; his opponent chuckled in the anticipation of raking down the pile. Old Blunt thought to borrow from the captain and from others, but he was unsuccessful ; he offered to play his plantation in Mississippi, but the " sporting gentleman" would not stand it-it was a cash game, and nothing but cash (current paper) would do - and, pulling out his watch and a six-barrel revolver at the same time, he made a marked asseveration, that unless his het was covered in three minutes, the money was his and death would be his who should interpose to prevent it. Another minute of intense suspense to the gambler passed away : he was now within two minutes time, he thought, of pocketing old Blunt's @15.000; when the latter, as if a flash of thought flew through his mind, sungrout, 6 Bill bring me the saddlebags here, quick !" In a second, they were on the table and open. Old Blunt seized their contents with his left hand, whilst he grasped the pistol, still on the table, with his right, and in a tone of triumph exclaimed. "Now, sir, I see that $15,000, and go that $285,000 better. Cover it in three minutes, or I rake down ; and if you move to prevent me, you are a dead man !".

The blackleg was bluffed that time. Old Blunt poid him the ten dollars which he had given him before the play : he gave a hun-dred dollar note as a present to his boy Bill, who, winking, temarked that." Massa was a sharp one." He shen raked his thirty thou-sand dallars winnings down, coolly remarking that, that he believed, waa the tallest game of poker ever played on the Missispi
