A Fine Set of Teeth for 25 Cents.
White Teeth, Foul Breath, Healthy Gums.
Yellow and unhealthy teeth, after being once or twice cleaned with JONES' AMBER TOOTH PASTE, have the appearance of the most beautiful Ivory, and at the same time it is so perfectly innocent and exquisitely pleasant, that its constant daily use is highly advantageous, even to those teeth that are in good condition, giving them a beautiful polish, and preventing a premature decay. Those already decayed, it prevents from becoming worse—it also fastens such as are becoming loose, and by perseverance it will render the loosest teeth delicately white, and make the breath deliciously sweet.
PRICE 25 OR 37 1/2 CENTS A BOX.
Sold in Wilmington, by Lippitt & Wilkings.

SONG OF THE IMPRISONED BIRD.
Ye may pass me by with pitying eye,
And cry, "Poor captive thing!"
But I'll prove ye are caged as safely as I, If ye'll hearken the notes I sing.
I flutter in thrall, and so do all;— Ye have bonds ye cannot escape, With only a little wilder range,
And bars of another shape.
The noble ranks of fashion and birth Are fettered by courtly rule; They dare not rend the shackles that tend To form the kuave and fool.
The parasite, bound to kiss the hand That, perchance, he may loathe to touch; The maiden, high-born, wedding where she may soon;
Oh! has earth whose chains than such?

The one who lives but to gather up wealth, Though great his treasures may be, Yet, guarding with care and counting with sweath—
What a captive wretch is he!

The vainly proud who turn from the crowd,
And tremble lest they spoil The feathers of the peacock plume With a low plebeian soil;— Oh! joy is mine to see them strut In their chosen narrow space; They mount a perch, but ye need not search For a closer prison place.

The being of fitful earthless wrath May fiercely stamp and rave; He may call himself free, but there cannot be More mean and piteous slave;
For the greatest victim, the faintest bound,
Is the one who serves his rage;
The temper that governs will ever be found A fearful torture cage.

Each breathing spirit is chastened down By the hatred of the dear;
The gentle smile or byrnt frown Will hold ye in love or fear.
How much there is self-will would do, Were it not for the dire dismay That bids ye shrink, as ye suddenly think Of "What will my neighbor say?"
Then pity me not; for mark mankind, Of every rank and age;
Look close to the heart, and ye'll ever find,
That each is a bird in a cage.

AFFECTING INCIDENT.
Among the passengers in the steamer Commodore, from this city to New Haven, last Saturday morning, were the wife of a Cornish miner name Rowe, and five or six children, chiefly girls, the oldest not exceeding ten or eleven years of age, and the youngest a babe. They arrived here from Wales only about two weeks since, and were on their way to the Bristol (Conn.) copper mines, where they hoped to meet their husband and father. As the steamer was leaving the wharf the mother stood in the gangway, almost frantic with anxiety and grief. Had the kind-hearted captain (Lefevre) been present and understood her case, he would have waited till her daughter had come on board, or until the mother and her other children could be put on shore. But as it was, the family were separated, under circumstances of peculiar trial. It appears that a few minutes before the steamer started the mother sent her oldest daughter, a girl between twelve and thirteen years of age, to buy some bread. Before she returned the steamer was off for New Haven—What the poor girl's thoughts were when she returned to the wharf and found the boat gone, and herself left alone in a strange city of half a million of inhabitants, we know not, but can partly imagine. The mother was, if possible, still more wretched.
When she found that the steamer was actually off, and that there was no hope of returning to the wharf, all the tender sympathies of a parent's heart were awakened within her, and she ran about the boat crying "Oh, my child!" The steward of the boat and some of the passengers tried to console her by telling her that the little girl would no doubt be taken care of, and be sent up to her at New Haven by the evening boat. This afforded her a gleam of hope, but her fears still predominated.
What could Matilda do, penniless, in the midst of strangers, without a home or friend, or knowledge of any thing around her?— Whom could she trust? How liable to be decoyed away by villains, and reserved for a doom worse than death! Hogarth could not have desired a more lively personification of grief than when that mother, being in a measure quieted, sat sobbing in her chair, nursing her infant, and hugging it to her bosom, while her other children, except the lost one, sat around her on the floor, not one of them uttering a cry, but every countenance expressive of the deepest sorrow.
Presently Captain Lefevre came and sat down by them, and, after some soothing remarks, returned them the whole of their passage money. Several dollars were also given them by passengers. This was the more needful, as by waiting for Matilda at New Haven until Saturday evening they were under the necessity of spending the Sabbath there, as there was no subsequent train for Bristol until Monday. But what if Matilda should not come? What if they should never see her again? These apprehensions, together with the anxiety already endured, produced symptoms of mental aberration in the mother, even before she arrived at New Haven. Immediately on their arrival a telegraphic despatch was forwarded to Messrs. Saxton and Webb, agents of the line in New York, requesting them to send by the afternoon boat the little girl that was left in the morning, and saying that her mother would wait for her at New Haven. On receiving this message, Messrs. Saxton & Webb, who had no previous knowledge of the misshap, went to the wharf and found the little girl crying. This must have been at least five hours after the steamer's departure. They told her the message they had received from New Haven, and that they would send her safe to her mother in a few hours, which they accordingly did, free of cost.

Thus, after a day of fearful anxiety and suspense, the family circle was again united, to the great joy of all, though the shattered mind of the mother prevented her from a full appreciation of the fact. The family where she spent the Sabbath informed us that she was evidently a good deal damaged, and that Matilda said she had been so before. Her former derangement was occasioned by the loss of a husband and child, the latter being burnt or scalded to death. On Monday she and all her children took the railroad train for Bristol, and must have reached their destination in a few hours.

Here is one small chapter in the life of a poor hard-working woman; and, if we could read the unwritten history of families and individuals, how many such scenes, or others equally and still more afflicting, would rise upon our vision.—N. E. Jour.
of Commerce.

THE UNFORTUNATE CIPHER.
The following capital story is from Le Follet, a French publication.
"A merchant at Marseilles, having a bu-sines correspondent on the African coast, bethought him, that as some members of his family had shown a partiality for monkeys, he might gratify them by sending for one or two specimens of these animals from America. Accordingly, he wrote to his correspondent to procure two or three of the finest and most admired species, and transmit them to Marseilles. Chance so ordered it that in putting down the sum (in English or) between the figures 2 and 3, he made the 0 very prominent, while the 1 remained scarcely visible. Some months afterwards a ship porter came in all haste to the old merchant, and announced to him that his menagerie had arrived. "Menagerie" cried the merchant. "Yes, a menagerie, a whole cargo of monkeys had arrived to his consignment." The merchant could scarcely credit the announcement, until the letter of his correspondent was put in his hands. In that epistle the African negotiator, a man of the most uncompromising exactitude, excused himself very earnestly for not having been able, with all his exertions, to procure more than 160 monkeys, in place of the 203 ordered, but promised, as soon as possible, to fulfil the entire demand. The feelings of the honest merchant may be guessed, when on moving down to the quay to satisfy himself on the subject by ocular inspection, he beheld his 160 monkeys, all duly caged and littered, and grinning at him with the most laudable pertinacity. It was the moment when a man might reasonably doubt whether it would be best to laugh or cry.
So much for the value of cyphers."

Business Before Pleasure.
It is as necessary that human beings should have recreation, as it is that they should be diligent in business; but one thing should never be allowed to take the place of another, and pleasure should never induce us to neglect necessary business.
There is a proper time for the performance of all work, and if not performed then, something will be wrong. First let our work for the time be attended to, and then indulge in play or recreation. Harvest time is not the time for farmers to take journeys of pleasure, nor are the business hours of the day the time for the merchant to take his promenades or rides for amusement. The good housewife, too, will never sit down to read a book or a paper till her house is in order and her work properly advanced for the day; she will never be found spinning street yarn and troubling her neighbors, till she has put every thing in place in her own home. This is the road to wealth, respectability and usefulness for either man or woman.

But when you see one who quits business at any time for pleasure—one who lets everything lay around unfinished and unattended to, for the sake of amusement, you see one who can never amount to much. We know of some who need to take this thought into consideration, and draw a lesson from it. Business habits should be early formed, and children should be taught to do all their work before they go to play. They should also be taught that as soon as work is required to be done they should perform it without delay. Delays often make work for repentance when it is too late to correct the error. Punctuality and diligence will give wealth and happiness.
