At the suggestion, nowever, of some by standers. 91-11 the poor woman, who declared her name to be Ann Mayfield, was induced to let the strollers proceed on their way, and advised to resort immediately to legal proceedings to enforce her parental rights According iv, a writ of habeas corpus was sued our in the Second District Court, by Ann May 139-11. neld, against Mr. and Mrs. Wilson. In her petition, she averred that she was the mother of the little girl, named Rosa, ageu seven years, who was stolen from her several years ago, and was now detained by the defendants. To this Mr. and Mrs. Wilson replied, by denying that she was the mother of the child, and further alleged that if she was the mother, she was that quarter was meditated. On the night of such notoriously bad character, that it of the 12th of September, the troops in would not be proper for her to have charge of so young a child. The case came up for trial before Judge Canon, and occupied all Wednesday and yesterday. The testimony established that the petitioner, Ann viayheld, came to Natchez some years ago. with a very yoing child, that she was deserted by the mail who accompanied her to that phose, and being in very destitute or can stances, and abxious to get to New Orteans, actually sold ber child to the Wil sons, an order to formish Ler with clothing and bear her expenses to this city, but that it was understood that she was to reclaim the child whenever she desired. Since then, however, she had heard nothing of the Wilsons and her child, until the accidental encounter on the streets. These facts were proved by a competent witness, and were to a great extent admitted by the defendants There was some difficulty, however, malentifying the child. The mother awore positively on this point, and the striking resemblance between them confirmed her testimony. Atter learned and eloquent arguments | fid it seem for an army to ascend those 14%. from Messre Frost and Abeil for plaintiffs, dangerous cliffs. He perceived that, unand Conckin and Reney for defendants, Judge Canon proceeded to render judgment in the case Whilst the Judge was said he, "where they ought not to be; but 29.11 remaring his decision, the scene within the since we must fight, I will go and crush Court-room was quite an impressive and af- them !" and immediately, with his whole accurage one On one side was the interes- army, he crossed the St. Charles and adting foods of the argan-grinder, in whose vanced to the attack. scene with deep interest. Judge Canon commenced his judgment by relating a fact that came under his observation about twenty years ago. A poor colored woman, in this city, once found at her door a newborn white infant, whom she took into her house, and, with great care and tenderness, nursed and reared until she grew up to be a beautiful and interesting girl of ten years, when she was one day recognized by a highly respectable lady as her own child, and as such was identified and returned.-In such cases as these, the benevolent Judge remarked, much stress must be given to the testimony of the mother, whese mannet would enable her to recognize and identify the child, when all other persons might fail in so doing. He would, therefore, order the child to be delivered over to the petitioner, (here the mother audibly exclaimed-" Thank you, Judge! thank you " whilst a deep sigh from the organcould give the whole history of what is one grinder, and a low sob from his wife showed how keenly they felt their apprehended bereavement.)

It was character was bad. He was sorry for it, composed of an Italian and his wife, who and trusted that when restored to the charge had assumed the English name of Wilson, of her little girl that she would alter her and a bright-eyed interesting li the girl, of conduct and lead a virtuous life. On the precocious not ingence, whose duty it was other hand, he did not think that the life to carry arothed the tamborme and collect and profession of the organ-grinder were the contributions of the crowds. ## THE DEATH OF WOLFE.

STORMING OF QUEBEC, 13TH SEPTEMBER, 1756 .- The camp at Montmorence was broken up, and the troops and artillery were conveyed to Point Levi; and very soon after, the fleet sailed to some distance above the city. This movement deceived Montcalm into a belief that an attack from poats glided silently down the river, and all the French sentinels were passed without being alarmed. They landed within a mile and a half of the city, and immediately commenced the ascension of the precipice. There was a French guard over their heads, and hearing a rustling noise, but seeing nothing, they fired at random down the declivity, while the British fired upward also at random. Terrified at so strange and unexpected an attempt, the French piquet fled, all but the captain, who was wounded and take prisoner --The poor fellow begged the British officers to sign a certificate of his courage and fidelity, lest he should be published for bribery, believing that Wolfe's bold enterprise would be deemed impossible without corruption When morning dawned, Wolfe, with his little army now reduced to less than five thousand men, stood upon the heights of Abraham, in bold defines of Montcalin and his overwhelming force.

The French General at first could hardly credit his own senses, so impossible less the English could be driven from their position, Quebec was lost. "I see them,"
