(FOR THE COMMERCIAL) LEGENDS OF THE WILMINGTON

That used to meet at Dorsey's Tavern,

Whole No. 525.

Half a Century ago. MR EDITOR :- To bring back to recollection and fix in memory events long gone by, gliding down the current of time to the boundless ocean of oblivion, is at once a pleasing and charitable task.

What changes has the lapse of half a ea and of approved number. This font is busy mortals that thronged the streets of Wilmington, 50 years ago? Where are the companions of my childhood, with whom I used to pass, satchel in hand, shivering in the morning breeze, to father Jennett's school, in Toomer's Alley ? Gone to their long account-swept from time-mouldering in the grave. "Like the dew on the mountain, Like the form in the fivet, . Like the bubble in the fountain, They are gone, and forever."

has disappeared; it served as the public Exchange, the resort of loungers and men the refreshing breezes which passed thro' its elevated arches.

But as this is the age of auctioneers, whose jests and gibes are proprogressive improvement, the jury of our verbial in the town; he who has not heard self-love empannelled from the venue, would of Jacob Levy must have come from some renovated spirits to their labors. ing over care, and a mistrustful complacenindeed, it is enough to try ones equanimity, would be as congemal to his feelings.

"O! when shall I see the dusky lake,

And white cance of my dear?" But are not the benevolent societies formed and forming around us some corrective of the evil ? On the lot of ground now occapied by stood in former times an old brick tenement, perforated with innumerable windows and doors, which must have so weakened the walls, that it is a miracle how they held together, unless by that power which is said to be the cement of political parties, (viz:) cohesive attraction. Constructed by unskilful or careless workmen, the windows were carelessly fixed in their casements, and when the wind was high, made just buch a clattering noise as the innumerable drays and carriages driven rapidly over the pavements of populous cities. In fact some have asserted they were set to music, and like the chiming of church bells, play-ed regular catches. Being the only tavern in the place, it is astonishing, on public occasions, how such a number of people could be accommodated. There were often two or three hundred boarders at a time, and but 20 or 30 rooms to accommodate them. It is said some of the arts and inventions of ancient times have been lost to posterity, this is possibly one of the arts that have passed away. At present, each man must have his separate room, then it served for 20, and some have asserted that the secret lay in packing away the guests with jack screws, like bales of cotton, which may have originated from the fact of their looking so flat next morning after their uncomfortable rest. It was kept by an old sea Captain, who was quite an Emperor in his way, and certainly stood at the head of the profession. Who has not heard of old Robert Dorsey, his good fare, his good old jamaica, his good wines, and every thing else good in his way? He was the very beau ideal of the jolly landford—obese and sound—laterulinal in his dimensions, house in countenance with a venerable whiteness of locks; not only furnishing his guests with good of et himselfhaving one peculiarity—he is said never to have tasted water for 30 years; and when Gen. Washington was entertained by him, upon inquiry, could not inform him whether the water was good, bad, or indifferent, avering he had not tasted it for 30 years, unmixed with his old jamaica. In this The old court house too, that stood at building, and under the auspices of such, the intersection of Front and Market streets, an host, was held the meetings of one of the most extraordinary societies that ever floated on the tide of time. It was deof business, who sought a temporary recre- nominated and ycleped " The Wilmington ation after damer, and to enjoy in summer Whistling Society," a short history of which I desire to lay before the world, and to rescue from oblivion its sayings and doings, Dorsey's tavern too, one of the great which deserve to be registered in golden land marks of the time, with its barn-like letters; and I am equaly astonished and appearance, has given place to an edifice indignant that no historian has yet been constructed after the tasteful elegance of found to transmit to posterity its memoramodern arcintecture; and instead of the ble acts and deeds. The biographical jollification of court weeks and election sketch of the dramatis persona of the Sodays, there is little to distinguish those ciety is from real life, fiction has nothing to eventful periods from the ordinary pursuits do with it, and as they were all good men of life.
