WILMINGTON, N. C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1849.

CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.

overweening fastidiousness, one innocent should come to scathe and harm. I took passage in the steamer Richmond for Albany, and was 17 hours in performing the trip, which was then considered a short and quick passage; the fare 8 dollars. There were then but 3 steamboats in the United States; in fact the world, viz: the Paragon, one of Fulton's experiment boats, which was lying in ordinary, resembling a fish coop painted yellow, with perpendicular slab sides. The Richmond, an improvement, but resembled an ordinary brig with rounded bows. The Chancellor Livingston, the same in structure, and had been but recently launched, not having performed her first trip; 9 miles an hour was a fair average of their speed, the sharp cutwaters and long hulls are more recent, and better adapted to speed. There were about 300 fellow passengers and it was to me altogether a novel and interesting scene.

Previous to selecting a berth, we had to enter our names in a book spread open on a table in the cabin. Just above mine I perceived the name of Anon Burr. I had seen him many years before, as he passed through Fayetteville, on a visit to his daughter in South Carolina, and a dignified, respectable looking man he then was, dressed in black silk; his eyes and hair jet black; keeping himself much aloof at DeKeyser's tavern, where he staid; did not mix with company nor eat at the public table; he was the perfect contrast with Col. Washington, who was passing through Fayetteville at the same time; with portly form and long hair clubbed and dangling down his back, his good natured countenance beamed upon all; he greeted and was greeted by every one, and when he took his departure next morning, a crowd gathered around him, he shaking them all cordially by the hand, and bidding them adieu, Not so with Burr, though many eyes were fixed upon him when he departed, no one approached him, and he wandered his way "solitary and alone" to his carriage. I desired a gentleman to point out to me Col. Burr among the crowd. He pointed to a little man on deck with his hands full of newspapers, talking with much assumed amenity to several gentlemen who stood around him; his once dignified and respectable appearance was gone; his hair was white as snow, and fell carelessly about his face; he had lost his teeth and his eyes their lustre and might have been well mistaken by his grinnings for a French barber. "Quantum mutatus ab illo!" Since I saw him last, he had slain Hamilton; been an exile in foreign countries; a solitary wanderer on the earth; decried by, and despising all men; brought to shame and ruin Blannerhasset's family; been arraigned for treason; had felt the pangs of remorse with all its concomitant horrors; high minded and proud as he had been, no wonder time with its scythe and hour glass, had made such inroads on his person.

"High minds of native, pride and force Most deeply feel thy pangs, remorse!
"Fear for the scourge mean villains have;
"Thou art the torturer of the brave!"

Just above Hoboken Ferry, on the Jersey shore, in full view of the river, stood the monument of Hamilton, which had been erected on the spot where he had been slain. As the steambot passed the monument, one of the passengers exclaimed, there is Hamilton's monument. I was looking at the monument in the face of Col. Burr, as he was talking to the gentlemen around; that moment a cloud seemed to pass over his countenance; he ceased speaking and hastily retreated to the Cabin. I went to the door (which stood open) to observe him; he was sitting alone in deep mourning on one of the settees; newspapers in disorder around him, one of which he held firmly clenched in his hand ruffled and disordered.

There, thought I, sits a living and instructive monument of fallen greatness, of misplaced ambition, a miserable melancholy wreck and derelict of genius!

The scenery of the Hudson has been so often described by abler pens, that I would be carrying Coals to New Castle to attempt it. Suffice it to say, if there be more beautiful and magnificent scenery in the world, I am ignorant of the fact, that's all—He who can look with cold indifference on the majestic highlands, the beautiful cities and villages that dot the borders of the river as he glides cheerfully along, and not cry all hail!! to the Catskill mountains, immortalized by the slumbers of old Rip Van Winkle; is like one having no soul for music, "fit for treason, stratagems and spoils."

When we arrived at Albany we found all classes discussing the merits of the grand canal, which had been projected by Dewit Clinton, for connecting Lake Erie with the Hudson; the first ground of which had been broken a few days before we arrived, just above Albany and opposite the city of Troy. This great Statesman and benefactor of his species was every where then ridiculed for his supposed wild projects; announced with all the hard names that those infamous projectiles of mud and dirt, a prostituted press, could cast at him; caricatured in the print shops; posted in the barber shops; ridiculed in squibs and epigrams; a stranger to his merits would have thought him the most egregious fool alive—such is the tax in our republic, a man pays for his eminence, levied and exacted without mercy; such the ingratitude of men towards their friends and benefactors; but why should we wonder at it, since they nailed to the Crucifix the Saviour of their kind?

I set out in a stage coach for Ballston Spring. The Sans Souci, and other hotels, were filled to overflowing. I procured accommodations, at what was called a private house, though there were at the time 70 boarders in the establishment; finding there a number of Englishmen from Canada with their families; and a more disagreeable, impudent set, I never fell among; they occupied every day at meals, the head of the table, and kept entirely aloof from the Americans, making within our hearing, ill natured remarks on the Country, and every thing appertaining to it. It will be recollected it was not long after the last war, in which they had been so dreadfully beaten both by sea and land. A little Frenchman who was of our Company observed "no wonder Jean Boal so sour, de stripe on he back no heal yet." They appeared by their conversation to have been acquainted with noblemen only, and my lord such a one, and sir such a one was continually on their lips. One day at dinner, a stuff-fellor looking fellow asked another, "And how did you leave Sir James Yeo when you saw him last." "In very good health, most excellent health replied the other." "Well," continued the first speaker, "its a pity he had not taken that old rascal, and grumpy, Commodore CHAUNCEY." Now it will be recollected that during the war CHAUNCEY commanded the American fleet on Lake Ontario, and Sir James the British fleet, and that the latter earned for himself by his tact of running from CHAUNCEY the tide and cognomen of "flying fish." An elderly quaker gentleman from Philadelphia, who was sitting with his family to my right, seemed deeply agitated; elevating his head, throwing down his knife and fork, and looking the Englishman full in the face; "friend," says he, "I perceive thee and thy companions are foreigners, partaking the hospitality of our land and people; if thee were gentlemen, thee would comport thyself with decency and respect, we have long borne with thy insolence, and borne it in silence, because we did not wish to disturb the good fellowship of this house. Thy nobility with which thee seems so intimate, I presume are like thee, as a man is known by the company he keeps; then permit me to say, sir, thy breeding seems very defective, and as thee has failed to learn good manners in the primary schools of thy nobility, we commend thee to our free and charitable institutions which are accessible to every vagrant, and where if thee be teachable at all, thy manners may be improved; I tell thee thy insolence shall be borne no longer, and if thee repeat it, I shall not be answerable for the consequences." The Englishman at first looked daggers and ratsbane at the old man, but cast a glance down the table and scanning our firm set countenances, and calculating the odds against them; looked at each other, curled their lips, threw up their noses, and prudently withdrew their forces within their lines.

There was every indication that the seed sown by Obedia's essay and lecture on good manners, had not fallen on stony places, as the gentlemen took special care not to continue the mixture, nor give any more offence during their stay at Ballston Spa— one of their ladies even graciously condescending to enter into conversation with Mr. Robertson, a member of congress from Louisiana. The conversation turned on the late war; Mr. R.—taking occasion to comment rather severely on the cruel policy of England in employing the Indian scalping knife; "and pray, sir," says the lady, "did not your President employ the Kentuckians against our people?" "I plead guilty, madam says Mr. R.—would you like to see a specimen of a Kentuckian?" "No objection in the world." "What do you think they are like?" "They are a kind of savages, are they not?" "Anthropophagi and men whose heads do grow beneath their shoulders." There sits one now, "pointing to judge Johnston, "a fine specimen of humanity." "Why," says she, you dont tell me that's a Kentuckian; he looks very much like a gentleman; are the others such?" "Even so madam, pretty much alike, though there are some finer looking men among them." "Well, I confess, I had been much misinformed, what o'clock is it? just 12—I must retire to make husband his glass of toddy," and she tripped away.

I remained in this locality about a fortnight and moved onward to Saratoga— Here I found a number of my friends and acquaintances from Wilmington; among others Mr. G.—and S.—who had come on by land since my leaving home, who gave me some intelligence of my family, and made me feel quite at home again. We returned to New York about the 1st September; spent 2 months in the city, sight seeing; visited the Theatre, there then being but one, which stood on Chatham street; saw the tragedy of "Hamlet" badly performed; Cooper had gone to England, no first rate actor left. Pritchard, Hopkins, Robertson, Simpson, and Mrs. Barnes, being most prominent, saw the first representation in this country of the tragedy of "The Apostate," the cast of character was most fortunate and appropriate—Piscara—Pritchard; Hynea—Simpson; Malec—Robertson. It had a triumphant run of many nights in succession; it was indeed an excellent and most popular performance. Pritchard excelled himself in Piscara, and fought the Corioli battle of his fame.

DISTILLERY PROPERTY FOR SALE.
THE undersigned is desirous of disposing of the Distillery Property lately operated by Jewett & Co. There are 4 stills all in perfect running order, and every thing in and about the premises conveniently arranged. The property has a front of 330 ft on the river, with a street 66 ft. on each side; a constant and full supply of fresh spring water running directly into the tubs; and indeed every facility for conducting the distillery business to the greatest possible advantage. This establishment may, with very slight expense, be converted into an extensive Liquor Distillery—for which, there is not a more advantageous location in the United States.

THE NORTH CAROLINA MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.
RALEIGH, N. C.
THE above Company has been in operation since the 1st of April last under the direction of the following Officers, viz:
Dr. Chas. E. Johnson, President,
Wm. D. Hayward, Vice President,
James F. Jordan, Secretary,
Wm. H. Jones, Treasurer,
Perin Busbee, Attorney,
Dr. Chas. E. Johnson, Medical board of
Dr. Wm. H. McKee, J. McKee, J. McKee, J. McKee, Dr. R. B. Hayward, & Consultants.
J. H. Smeun, Gen'l Agent.

This Company has received a charter giving advantages to the insured over any other Company. The 5th Section gives the Husband the privilege to insure his own life for the sale of his wife and children, free from any claims of the representatives of the husband or any of his creditors.
Organized on purely mutual principles, the life members participate in the whole of the profits which are declared annually. Besides, the applicator for life, who insures the premium is over 90
may pay one half in a Note.
All claims for insurance against the Company will be paid within ninety days after proof of the death of the party is furnished.
Slaves are insured for one or five years, at rates which will enable all Slaveholders to secure this class of property against the uncertainty of life.
Slave insurance presents a new and interesting feature in the history of North Carolina, which will prove very important to the Southern States.
The last four months operation of this Company shows a very large amount of business—more than the Directors expected to do the first year—having already issued more than 200 Policies.
All communications on business of the Company should be addressed to
JAS. F. JORDAN, Secretary,
Raleigh, August 29, 1849.

the latest and most improved style, and is exerting his best efforts to manufacture, at his store on Market Street, formerly occupied by Guy C. Hatcher, every description of articles in the above line. From his experience in the business, he feels confident that he will be able to give entire satisfaction to his customers, and all others who may favor him with a call. He has now on hand, and will constantly keep, a large assortment of
Coach, Gig, and Bridles, Whips
Sulky Harness, &c.; Gentlemen's
Ladies' Saddles, &c.; Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Spurs, &c., &c. all of which he will warrant to be of the best material and workmanship. He has also a large assortment of
Trunks, Valises, Saddle and Carpet Bags, Satchels, fancy Trunks, &c., and all other articles usually kept in such establishments, all of which he offers low for CASH, or on short credit to prompt customers.
Saddles, Harness, Trunks, Medical Bags, &c. &c.
made to order.
Repairing of all kinds done with neatness and despatch. Old Saddles and Harness taken in part pay for new.
