Martha Flowers

Miss Flowers Presents Musical Concert at UNC

A Winston-Salem native Martha Flowers, soprano, who teaches voice in the Department of Music at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, presents a concert this Sunday afternoon, Nov. 3. The concert will be in Hill Hall on the campus of UNC. The program will consist of songs by Mozart, Debussy, Schumann, selections from "Porgy and Bess" and Negro Spirituals.

Miss Flowers has been teaching at UNC for the past two years. She came to UNC with impressive credentials. Miss Flowers has been hailed for the vocal and dramatic talents that have made her the definitive "Bess" of the Gershwin opera, and has been just as enthusiastically praised for the pure musicality of her concert appearances.

The world-wide tours of "Porgy and Bess" have taken this Winston-Salem native through the major cities of the world. Martha Flowers has had concert appearances in Moscow, Leningrad, Paris, Berlin and Oslo. She has triumphed in South America, Africa, Asia, and New Zealand, where she starred with a company of Maoris as well as in the major U.S. cities and Summer theatres.

The broad range of her art has been revealed in the program encompassing German Lieder, French art songs, classic, contemporary work and the Negro Spirituals.

Recently, Miss Flowers was invited to perform a program of sacred music by Bach and Handel and of Negro Spirituals at the famed Roskilde Domirke where the Kings of Denmark are buried. She was accompanied then by a string quartet from the Danish Royal Opera Company. During two recent European tours, she performed in recital, with orchestra and on radio broadcasts in the other Scandinavian countries, in East Germany, Greece, Portugal and the island of Madeira.

Martha Flowers first made her debut in 1954 at the New York Town Hall as a Naumburg Award winner. She Food stamp program is available to more Forsyth County residents, particularly students and low income people, than the program now serves. That is why a drive will soon be underway in Nov. to reach as many people who can benefit from the program.

"A meeting of interested people who will be visiting area churches, places where potential clients may be reached, clubs and all the community areas," said Mrs. Mitzie Reavis, Food Stamp Supervisor, is planned for November.

Mrs. Reavis, a sincere speaking lady, said that her group will be doing all in their power to get food stamps to all people who qualify for them.

The people receiving food stamps now are evenly divided as to race about 50 percent white and 50 percent black. The Federal Agency has always had some problems in reaching all the potential receivers. Some people shy away from the program for personal reasons. There are others who qualify but cannot get time off from work to go to the Agency to sign the necessary papers.

A & T Seek N.C. Vet School

Officials at A&T State University announced last week that the university is definitely interested in having the state's proposed school of veterinary medicine located on the Greensboro campus.

A board of governors subcommittee will consider the requests later this month and the full board will consider them Nov. 15.

When contacted about A&T's interest in the proposed school, which is also being sought by North Carolina State University in Raleigh, Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, chancellor said:

"We are definitely interested in the possible location of the proposed school of veterinary medicine at A&T.
