NAACP To Picket Banquet - Chapel Hill

Plans were announced Monday by a coalition of Chapel Hill NAACP and University of North Carolina

Sam Ervin

black students to picket banquet Wednesday for ex-Senator Sam Ervin Jr. The picket was to protest what Chapel Hill NAACP president

Robert Kelly called Mr. Ervin's "racist record in Congress."

Kelly said that Mr. Ervin's "disgraceful congressional record," must be available for public review.

"The NAACP", said Kelly, "is outraged that Sam Ervin will receive the award by the North Carolina Public Service."

According to a record released, Sam Ervin voted against the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Voting Rights Act of 1965, Open Housing, the Equal Employment Commission, Model Cities, Headstart, Manpower Training, Food Stamps, Medicare-Medicaid, and the Equal Rights Amendment, among others.

It is estimated that over 250 persons will take part at the picket.

Ex-Senator Sam Ervin will be honored as the third recipient of the North Carolina Public Service Award at a banquet at the Carolina Inn in Chapel Hill.

More than 600 students at Winston-Salem State University staged a demonstration in the campus Library Monday night in an attempt to get a policy of co-ed visitation at the school.

In a meeting held Monday, January 13 the Administrative Council rejected a proposal for Co-Ed visitation submitted by the Student Government Association.

The proposal called for:

Students to be permitted to have visitors in their rooms on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday from 6 to 9 p.m.;

That only students at the school would be permitted to participate;

That the person having the visitor must come down and get the visitor and escort him keeping and that the role of dormitory supervisors was unclear.

The Administrative Council asked Dr. Sylvester Wooten, Director of Student Affairs, and Ruth Greene, Dean of Women, to contact dormitory and resident supervisors for their ideas on solving the problems.

However, many students believed that it was a delaying tactic. Students urged action on the proposal be taken before the next regularly scheduled Board of Trustees meeting in March.

Monday, January 19 students held a meeting and decided to take action to let the administration know how strongly they felt about the matter.

Immediately following the meeting more than 300 marched to the campus home of Chancellor Williams and asked for a meeting. The Chancellor met with about 15 student representatives. But, according to students, he failed to commit himself on the issue. The students then marched from the Chancellor's home to each dormitory and the number increased to about 600.

The march culminated in See DEMAND Page 2

Fund Initiated

A memorial scholarship fund has been initiated at A&T State University in honor of the late Mrs. Zoe Barbee, county commissioner who was killed in a car accident near Durham December 23.

The Zoe P. Barbee Memorial Scholarship Fund was announced Monday by the Aggie Boosterettes, a women's organization at the university. Mrs. Barbee was a charter member of the organization.

Mrs. Virginia McKee, president of the organization, said the scholarship will be awarded annually to needy students embracing Mrs. Barbee's ideals.

Students Shock Faculty

Members of the Administration at Winston-Salem State University were shocked by the takeover of O'Kelly library by students January 20. Students at W-S State voiced their disapproval of the rejection of the Student Government's Co-Ed visitation proposal.

Chancellor Kenneth R. Williams called the takeover "an exhibition of jungle and pressure tactics".

Mrs. Ruth Greene, Dean of Women at the school, stated that dormitory matrons on campus were shocked by the students' chase through the dorms and the use of all kinds of profanity.

Students took to the streets after a student body meeting on January 20th, and after demanding and getting a meeting with the Chancellor moved from dormitory to dormitory gathering student support. At one point the doors of some dorms were locked to keep students out.

A meeting of the Administration Council was scheduled for Thursday, January 24 to review the proposal again.
