A&T Gets African Artifacts

An expensive collection of African artifacts has been donated to the A&T State University African Heritage Center by the Peter K.

Daniells family of Monrovia, Liberia.

Presentation of the gift was made to Mrs. Mattye Reed, curator, by Miss Ann Daniells, a student at Roanoke College.

Daniells is a career development officer currently stationed in Liberia.

Included in the gift to A&T are artifacts from Mali, Rwanda, Ethiopia, Nigeria, Dahomey and Ghana.

The Daniells first met Mrs. Reed and her home when Dr. William Reed was assigned by the AID to Ethiopia. Included in the Daniells' gift are a collection of sculpture, including masques, an antique bowl, a shuttle and a Mali door lock.

Among the other items are assorted woven items including an ingera bread basket, a sifter, a peasant hat from Mali and a serving tray.

"Original African artifacts are becoming more and more difficult to come by," said Mrs. Reed. "We are extremely pleased with this outstanding gift from the Daniells, who quickly responded when they learned that we had opened our heritage center at A&T."

The African Heritage Center, whose collection now numbers nearly 600 artifacts from 21 African nations, has public showing daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Special tours are also available to students and groups.
