in or out of court. She termed the silence a "protective" measure for the employee as well as the employer.

She also said that the establishment of these committees was a step in the right direction for making the home a better facility.

The fourth committee will be made up of the chairman of the other three committees and Mrs. Pikula. She said this committee would serve as kind of a "mini-board" that will oversee the overall effectiveness of the various committee functions. She said it was also easier to call together four or five people when some issue needed to be discussed rather than trying to get all the 15 odd board members together.

Budget Hearing

the city administration had failed in their attempts to convince the people that their interests were seriously taken to heart.

He said, "People have to feel that their message has gotten across."

Each year they (the board) have heard what the people have wanted, and each year they have done what they wanted to do."

He said further, "When you consider how many worthy recommendations have been brought before the board over the years and you look at how many were acted on you can see that not very much has been accomplished."

Dissenting, alderman Richard Davis, said that he felt a lot of the programs the people wanted to have been accomplished and that the light turnout was a reflection of citizen contentment with existing programs. "Those people you hear from and who attended the meeting were people who were not satisfied with some existing programs or those who wished to see new ones introduced."

have finished yet." According to Baldwin, he remains in France among other reasons because he has less distractions for his literary pursuits and simply because he can get more writing done while there.

After his lecture whose theme was "kinds of silence" Baldwin entertained many questions from listeners. Questions ranged from "what advice do you offer to aspirant black youth writers" to "what do you do when you're so frustrated and so filled with hate that you don't know what to do with it."

To the latter question he replied, "There are too many things in the world to do constructive, rather than hate."

Holding both blacks and whites equally as spellbound with his frankness and candid opinions about life and the general framework of it all, even after the presentation of lecture, many sought after him with more questions, autographs, and just merely to meet him and shake his hand. He was entertained at a reception at the home of Dr. Elizabeth Phillips after the affair. (See "Social Whirl").

Baldwin was a segment of the Wake Forest University's Institute of Literature that is jointly sponsored by the Departments of English, German, Classics, and Romance Languages. The purpose of the Institute is to promote the cause of humane letters and to manifest something of the diversity in unity which characterizes the literary heritage of the west.
