WSSU Host Play, 'Life Of A King'

"The Life of A King" was presented last evening on the campus of the Winston-Salem State University by the American Program Bureau with a cast of eight members.

The play and story, written by Arthur Langford, Jr. is the inspirational story of Dr. King's struggles on behalf of civil rights and human dignity - the Montgomery bus boycott, the demonstration in Birmingham, the march on Washington, Dr. King's memorable "I Have A Dream" speech, the sanitation march of Memphis and Dr. King's final speech in Memphis.

The play was sponsored by the Student Activities Committee in observance of the birthdate of the magnanimous Dr. King.

According to Mrs. Elaine Browne, coordinator of Student Activities, the play was "superbly presented and very well received by over 500 spectators."

second consecutive starting assignment on January 8th against Norfolk State. Robinson was matched against the Spartans more highly publicized freshman Robert Isabelle. The 6-6 250 pound Isabelle had scored 31 points and pulled down 31 rebounds in one game earlier in the season but Robinson played him to a standstill despite giving up some 50 pounds. In the Rams one point loss Mike had 15 points and 12 rebounds while Isabelle collected 16 points and 11 rebounds before fouling out late in the game.

Robinson who was not as highly touted as some other Ram recruits has now become a major cog in the Rams hopes for the CIAA championship and he could be even more of a key should the Rams reach Kansas City.

Gaines is optimistic about his team's chances in post season play. Blessed with outstanding guards and Robinson's development on the inside the coach feels his team is a strong contender.

With Robinson playing strong inside the coach says, "With the group we have now our inside attack is as strong as it ever has been. I think with what we've got now we are stronger inside than we were with Earl Williams."
