Dr. King's Birthday Should Be National Holiday

In addition to Saturday January 15 being designated as "National Nothing Day" as pointed out by Robin Richards of the WXII Channel 12 newstaff, it was also the birthdate of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Efforts to have the day declared a national holiday have failed on numerous occasions.

This week the "man in the street" asked city residents what they did in observance of Dr. King's birthday.

Here are some of their answers.

Herbert Hickerson replied, "I stayed home and watched T.V. Dr. King's birthday should be declared a holiday. If the day had fallen on a work day I wouldn't have worked. My wife and I had already decided that."

Diane Jackson stated, "I didn't get to do anything in observance of the day. I had t work even though his birthday is a holiday to me personally. I think the day should be declared a national holiday."

Juanita Carpenter commented, "I had to work because I am employed at the hospital and we work on holidays. But I recognized the fact that it was Dr. King's birthday. The date should be set aside as a national holiday in my opinion."

Dengil Ryan reported, "I took my lady out to dinner. The date was a holiday to me and I didn't do any work. It should be a national holiday."

Faith Brandon responded, "I stayed at home about all day. That's the way I do on most holidays. To me the date meant more than Washington or Lincoln's birthday. I would like to have been in Georgia
