 In his reply, Davis stated that in his opinion, the citizens of the North Ward know his position on city government, because he has been alderman for 7 years.
 "I don't need to debate," said Davis, "but if Little thinks he does, I am willing—under certain conditions."
 Davis has not revealed what those conditions are, but Little's campaign manager Howard Wiley said: "We can't let him dictate the terms of the debate to us. It has to be mutually agreed upon. But we are still willing to discuss it with Davis, and try to work out acceptable terms for the debate."
 In his challenge, Larry Little suggested that a format be constructed allowing the participants to entertain questions from a panel composed of the 6 North Ward precinct chairpersons, with a "distinguished representative of the community" serving as moderator.

 during which time he wrote the original proposal from which Urban Arts of the Winston-Salem Arts Council was funded.

If elected, Sumler could become the first man to serve on the board of aldermen while suing the board of aldermen. His suit concerns his dismissal from the Recreation Department, who charged him with buying a television with a city discount for non-city usage.

The issues that Sumler will address in his campaign include: equal job opportunity, decent housing, a police review board, and minority business development.

Since he is not sure whether or not he will have an opponent in the primary, Sumler chose to wait until later to announce his campaign staff.

James A. Beaty, Jr., a Winston-Salem attorney and secretary of the Association of Black Lawyers, said: "We hope that Justice Sharp will recall her appointments, but I don't think she will. We sent her a letter offering to help her select blacks, but she didn't respond, so I doubt if she'll change her appointments now."

Susie Sharp contends that her appointments were made without thought to the sex or race of the individual. She has, she says, appointed persons who will select trial judges on a non-partisan, non-political basis.

"There is neither a racist nor a male chauvinist in the group," she said.
