NEWS OF ENERGY

Dig Saving Energy, Geologists Urge

We are burning up our oil and natural gas resources as if there's no tomorrow. But tomorrow's needs for energy will be even greater than today's.

This year the U.S. is expected to consume almost 20 million barrels of oil a day. According to The World Almanac only 10 million barrels of oil a day are produced domestically. Frightening, isn't it? By 1985 it is estimated that consumption will increase up to 25.6 barrels a day, with domestic production rising to only around 11 million barrels daily.

This harsh reality of domestic supplies lagging far behind our pace of consumption, combined with the leveling off of our rate of discovering new oil and gas fields, makes us depend more on other forms of energy from the earth: coal, uranium, water and geothermal (heat from the earth itself) energy. However, like oil and gas, these forms too are not limitless.

Only if every single one of us curbs his or her seemingly unquenchable thirst for energy and takes simple steps to conserve it at home, at work and on the road—
