Serious Problems Which Affect us All

We are so deeply engrossed in the great gas problem that we fail to realize the gravity of other contemporary problems that are now threatening our health and welfare. These are some American problems that we now face and should give serious thought to as families:

Chemical Waste is one of the great problems knocking at our door. In our great search and grasp for industry to move into southern areas and provide jobs for people and boost the economy, one thing was overlooked. Where would, these companies dump their waste?

There was a time when industries could dump thousands of tons of waste into oceans, rivers, lakes and streams and forget about it. Then everybody started doing this, and one day we awoke to find that cows were drinking the water and getting sick and dying from the poison. Fish were dying. The health and welfare of humans were affected because the water from wells became polluted, and plant life was threatened.

Today we find that these chemical waste and pollution problems are growing by leaps and bounds. It is too big and too hot for leaders to handle, because people's job s are at stake.

The companies were called into question, and some laws were passed to restrict the dumping of waste into waterways. Some companies then started shipping chemical waste by trucks and railroads, but the people living and traveling on highways objected and said this was unsafe for them and their families. Some trains were overturned and the chemicals spilled in cities and towns and put thousands of people in danger.

Some companies tried to solve the problem by

The second se Others piled it up and fenced in the piles. Then this became a problem, because the cans started leaking, and the piles grew higher and higher. Storage space started running out.

Whether to develop nuclear power to cut down on our great dependence on foreign oil is another great problem now facing America. Until recently, nuclear power producers and promoters had argued that it was safe and that citizens living near such plants had nothing to fear from leakage and malfunctioning machinery. But the events of recent weeks have told a different story. Some nuclear plants have leaked. What does all this suggest to families of today?

1. Teach your children never to go near any spill on a street.

along the side of highways and picking up any types of particles.
