

Andrew Young, American ambassador to the U.N., takes time to talk with government major Stephanie K. Bell of Radcliffe College, one of GLAMOUR Magazine's Top Ten College Women of 1979. Ms. Bell met with several outstanding people in her career field as GLAMOUR's guest during an all-expense-paid trip to New York City.

Featured in the August College Issue, Ms. Bell was chosen for her accomplishments as program director and chairperson of the board of trustees for the Harvard-Radcliffe Afro-American Cultural Center, as editor of a school publication, the Black and Crimson, and as research assistant and speech-writer to the Mayor of New Orleans.

Glamorous Coeds

Today's college woman is more than a student of academia, she's a student of the real world—an active, involved participant in business and public affairs. GLAMOUR Magazine has selected ten outstanding college women for 1979 who exemplify this new direction. With interests ranging from criminal law to bioengineering, all the women have shown exceptional insight and leadership outside, as well as within, their college community.

The finalists will be featured in the August college issue, receive a $500 cash prize and an all-expense-paid trip to New York. There they'll have the opportunity to enjoy the city and meet with some of the professionals in their chosen field.

Each year, any woman who is a full-time student at an accredited undergraduate institution is invited to apply to GLAMOUR's contest. Ten finalists Richard Arrington, her parents, still reside.

•Mayne Rose Jackson, a recent graduate of the University of Mississippi in Oxford, Miss., as a winner in the Top Ten College Women Contest of 1979.

Ms. Jackson was one of 55 students in the U.S. to receive an American Newspaper Publisher Association Foundation Scholarship for Minority Journalism Students. She also received a Scripps-Howard Scholarship, a Tri Delta Sorority Scholarship, and a University Scholarship for Outstanding Achievement. This past year she was elected to serve as a national officer for the Society of Professional Journalists.

She was the first black woman in history to be named to the University's Hall of Fame, the school's highest honor. She was also voted Outstanding Senior Journalism Graduate by the University faculty and administration.

and six honorable mentions are selected by a panel of GLAMOUR editors on the basis of their campus and community activities, awards, scholastic achievements, leadership abilities, and work experiences. This year, the winners were selected from a group of over 700 applicants across the country.

Among the selectees are:

•Angela W. Arrington, a recent graduate of Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H.

Ms. Arrington, a psychology major who specialized in mental health services, chose to balance her studies with practical work experience through assistantships and volunteer work.

"I felt that preparation for a career in mental health services required more than rote knowledge through books and class lectures...I decided to gain some experience in a clinical setting," Mrs. Arrington explains.

In 1977, Ms. Arrington became a therapy activities assistant at the Mary Hitchcock Mental Health Center in Hanover, N.Y., where she first applied her theoretical know-how.

Most recently, as a trainee at the Philadelphia Child Guidance Clinic, a treatment facility for emotionally disturbed children and their families, she had the opportunity to work in an urban setting with minority children, one of her long-time special interests.

Each year, Ms. Arrington was ranked in the top 5% of her class and was elected to the Dartmouth chapter of Phi Beta Kappa for 1979. She has also been awarded the Beinecke Memorial Scholarship, a two-year graduate fellowship, which she will use toward her Ph.D. in clinical psychology at UCLA.

Ms. Arrington is originally from Philadelphia, Pa., where Mr. and Mrs.

Most recently, she was selected as one of the 50 outstanding young leaders in Mississippi for 1978-79 by the State Economic Council.

Ms. Jackson was a highly visible person on the Old Miss campus. In addition to using her writing skills as editor of The Journalists, the student press association newspaper, she demonstrated outstanding leadership ability as president of the Association for Women Students, as a University Ambassador, and as a member of the Student Advisory committee to the Board of Trustees. As chairman of the Committee for Black Concerns, she persuaded the school administration to fund a black student organization and she helped recruit some top black athletes for her school.

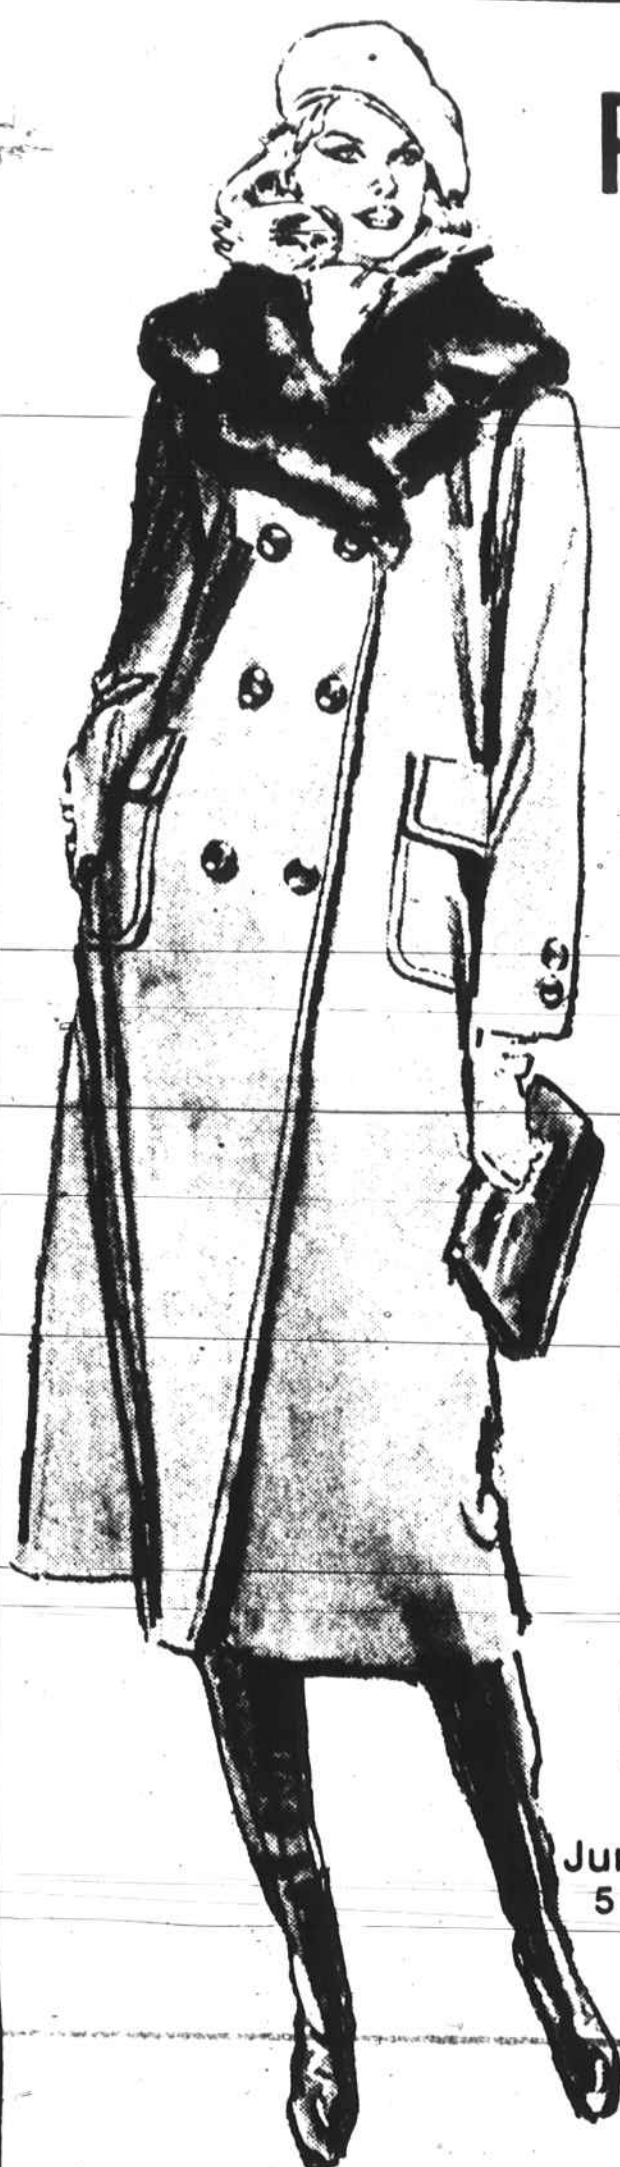

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Jackson of Clarksdale, Miss., she is now working as a news reporter for the Memphis Commercial Appeal.

•Stephanie K. Bell, a recent graduate of Radcliffe College in Cambridge, Mass., has received numerous citations at Radcliffe. Among them are the Radcliffe Centennial Scholarship, a special honor commemorating Radcliffe's 100th anniversary; the Radcliffe College National Scholarship, the highest honor Harvard and Radcliffe Colleges confer on undergraduates; and the Michael Clark Rockefeller Memorial Travelling Fellowship, which she will use for a year-long study project in South America upon graduation.

Ms. Bell was program director of the Harvard-Radcliffe Afro-American Cultural Center and subsequently became chairperson of its Executive Board. There, she supervised the organization of cultural and educational programs for the university and the local community.
