housing development to the neighborhood.

Reynolds giving the money directly to the association, who would operate the project.

All of these suggestions are included in the neighborhood's proposal.

Little said that a major concern of the association is whether residents could afford to continue living in relocation housing after monies had run out.

"People might move to a better house, but if they don't have the continuing income to stay, then they've got to find another old trap somewhere else."

Some people in the neighborhood would not be eligible for relocation funds because they don't live in substandard housing.

The historical tone of the neighborhood is also an important factor in the dilemma. Lloyd Presbyterian Church, located in the heart of Liberty-Patterson, is noted as one of the oldest black churches in Winston-Salem.

The proposal was turned down by the Reynolds Corporation on the grounds that the city had already agreed to give 225,800 in relocation assistance, and that the 500,000 was a sufficient "gift" to the community.

The board of directors of the neighborhood association is in the process of meeting to decide what action to take next.
