Economics-Racism Main Concerns Of Blacks In The '80's

EDITOR'S NOTE: During the first two weeks in September ten [10] blacks who are active in North Carolina political life were asked ten questions relating to the status of Afro-Americans in North Carolina and the nation. The following article is an analysis of those responses. Responses to the questions will follow during the next three weeks. We encourage reader reaction to the series and the views expressed in these columns.

Former Coliseum Director Indicted

Bill McGee and Michael C. Smith were officially indicted yesterday by the Forsyth County Grand Jury on charges that they conspired to traffic and sell a quarter-pound of cocaine.

McGee, who has been suspended as manager of the Benton Convention Center and Memorial Coliseum, was released from jail on Sept. 2 after posting a his place of residence due $100,000 property bond.

Economics and racism were the most important concerns of ten (10) blacks who were asked "what are the most pressing concerns of blacks in 1981?" The blacks questioned, in the informal survey, included a top official of a major black life insurance company, three grassroot community organizers, one minister, two politicians, two educators (one educator doubles as a politician), a social worker, and a black newspaper publisher.

Spiraling inflation, rising unemployment, and human service program budget transfers to the defense department have focused widespread public concern on economics. Six of the ten respondents in the survey said among pressing concerns is development of an economic base within the black community to provide unmet needs of black people cut from federal programs.

Asked what the role of the "national and state governments" should "play in eradicating poverty, disease, and illiteracy" seven said jobs, health care, housing, and other services should be administered from the federal government in opposition to the current trend to transfer responsibility for programs cut in the federal budget to local and state governments. Reaganomics, the popular reference to President Reagan's economic program, none agreed with, but four out of the ten interviewed said they thought the plan would unify blacks in opposition to it. The question asked was "Is Reaganomics a cure or curse on Black Americans?" Two of the people interviewed said it was a curse, two said it was neither a curse nor a cure, and four said it was both.

Surprisingly, nine of the ten respondents said they are

Mechanics And Farmers Bank

Hunt To Speak At Opening

Gov. James B. Hunt

Ribbon cutting ceremonies for the Grand Opening of Mechanics & Farmers Bank will take place at 10 a.m. on Saturday, Sept. 19. This will mark the beginning of business for the bank located at 770 Claremont Avenue.

Governor James B. Hunt will be on hand for the ceremonies.

Invitations have been extended to the general public and to a number of dignitaries.

The new building project, which was started in January by bank Corporation, Veteran Financial Building Consultants, was completed this week.

Many of the latest innovations, which mark today's contemporary bank styles have been incorporated into the design and decor of Mechanics & Farmer's new office. The striking use of color and lighting as well as the use of the latest in security equipment are but a few features included in the project.

The grand opening periods will extend through Friday, Oct. 2, at which time a drawing will take place for several prizes to

Dr. Ben Africa, vice-president of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, the governing party in South-African Controlled Namibia, told reporters recently that the U.N. refused to permit him to speak was "another blatant example of United Nations bias." Standing alone behind South Africa for the second time this week, the U.S. cast the only vote in support of Pretoria's U.N. delegation taking its seat in the General Assembly for an emergency debate on south west Africa.

McLean Remembers Roy Wilkins:

Roy Wilkins

'Desegregation His Determination'

By Yvonne Anderson
Staff Writer

"I guess he had a conviction of freedom for the black man. He thought he could bring it about and he did bring it about," said Charles McLean, of the late Roy Wilkins who died last week of kidney failure in a New York hospital.

Leaders from many sectors and of all beliefs gathered in New York last Friday to give homage to the man who led the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) through the turbulent sixties.

McLean met Wilkins in the early forties when Wilkins was the editor of Crisis, the official magazine of the NAACP. He remembered him as a very likable guy, who was very calm.

"He was the type of fellow that listened to anyone who wanted to confer with him," McLean said. "HE

"He just had a way of making you feel comfortable."

The son of a minister, Wilkins began his career while studying at the University of Minnesota. There he served as the night editor of the university's newspaper and editor of a black weekly newspaper, the St. Paul Appeal. Upon graduation, he went to work for the Kansas City Call, a leading-black newspaper in Missouri.

From the editorship of the Crisis magazine, Wilkins became assistant secretary under Walter White in the civil rights organization in 1931 and in 1955 became executive secretary after White's death.

"He was very persuasive," reflected McLean. "He followed the adage 'speak softly and carry a big stick', and his stick was the NAACP."

McLean said that Wilkins was a 'regular kind of guy' who liked to entertain and liked to meet people.

"I think his only real hobby was sports cars," McLean said with a smile.

Under Wilkin's leadership the NAACP was instrumental in seeing the passage of school desegregation, the Civil Rights Act of 1957 and 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. President Lyndon B. Johnson appointed him to an eleven member commission on Civil Disorder in 1967 to investigate the rash of racial riots that took place in the nation's inner cities.

"Desegregation was his determination," McLean said strongly. "Roy believed in it and did everything he could to make it a

History Of The Black Press

By Yvonne Anderson
Staff Writer

Today is the first observance of the importance of the existence of the black press in America. It is not that blacks in media have not been present in the past, indeed, since the publication of the first black newspaper in 1857, the importance of black media was established and has continued through the present.

In an effort to respond to an editorial printed in the New York Sun, John B. Russwurm wrote a rebuttal that the editors refused to print. He was told that he would either have to pay a $10.00 fee to have the article printed or start his own newspaper. Russwurm did both. In 1827, the Freedom's Journal became the first black newspaper to be published in the United States.

Fulfilling a need for an avenue to voice the opinions and concerns of black Americans, many more newspapers were established in the coming years.

Said Russwurm in the first issue of his paper on March 16, 1927, "Education being an object of highest importance to the welfare of society, we shall endeavor to present just, adequate views of it, and to urge upon our brethren the necessity and expediency of training their children while young to the habits of industry..."

Russwurm joined forces with Reverend Samuel Cor-

AFL-CIO Issues Call For 'Solidarity Day'

The AFL-CIO has called for a Sept. 19 "Solidarity Day" demonstration in Washington to protest the Regan Administration's assault on vital social programs, to assert demands for jobs and justice, and to reaffirm the labor movement's historic commitment to social and economic justice.

In a telegram to J.P. Richardson, President of the Winston-Salem Central Labor Union, President Lane Kirkland said that "Solidarity Day" will be the most effective response to the Administration's claim that it speaks for the working people of America and will show that union members and their families insist on protecting the gains we've made over the last half-century".

Organizations that have common concerns and share a common commitment have been invited to join the demonstration which will bring to the National Capitol a cross-section of rank and file union members and other concerned Americans in a one-day event. The allied organizations invited to participate include leading civil rights organizations, senior citizens and women's groups, and dozens of public interest organizations concerned over the severity of the Administration's cut backs that threaten vital programs ranging from school lunches, Social Security pensions and on the job safety and health, to job development, wage and hour standards and clean air and water -- and all of those in between.

Labor unions which will be sponsoring buses to Washington will be the Central Labor Union, Communication Workers of America Local 3060, employees at
