More than 25 friends and relatives gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Gallimore of 1521 Fitch Street last Saturday. The Gallimores celebrated their golden wedding anniversary last week.

"We were married on October 31, 1931, I'll never forget that day," commented Mrs. Gallimore as she reminisced of her married life.

According to Mr. Gallimore, it was the ups and downs that made their marriage last so long.

"We had some good times and some bad, but we tried to understand each other through it all, and that made it work," he added.

Mrs. Gallimore said that through their marriage, she believes that she and her husband learned what love really meant.

"I remember a birthday card he gave me that explains it all, the willingness to share each other's lives, no matter what comes, the desire to care, no matter what anyone else has to say," she explained.

In an attempt to offer some advice to couples who are just beginning their married lives, Mr. Gallimore said that knowing that you love each other makes the difference between a marriage that works, and one that does not.

"People need to understand that loving does not mean that you always agree with each other; like I said, we had some good times and some bad, but it's all been worth it."

More than 30 friends and relatives attended a birthday party held at Union Baptist Church in honor of Mrs. Bertha Penn last Saturday. The location of the party was a special treat for Penn, because she had not been able to attend the church for the last seven years because of illness.

The party was sponsored by several of Penn's relatives, along with members of the Missionary Society of the church, in honor of Penn's 80th birthday.

The festivity began with a program which consisted of poems, words of tribute, and songs which expressed, not only appreciation, but also showed admiration for the honoree.

Among guests present were Reverend and Mrs. J.D. Ballard.

Penn, a noted humanitarian in the state, is an Alumnus of the Slater Chapter of Winston-Salem

State University, where she graduated with honors. Although, Penn has not been able to attend Union Baptist for the last seven years, she is the leader of group no. 2 of the Missionary Society of the church.

Saturday evening's event was climaxed by words of thanks by Mrs. Penn.

"I want to thank each one of you for making my birthday so special. I remember when I was sick at home and couldn't even talk, I asked God to give me back my voice, and he did," she said.

The party ended with refreshments and fellowship enjoyed by everyone present.
