teaching is no longer a profession. There is no interest in the job."

Amos Wilson, student at North Carolina A&T State University: "I don't think teachers should have to pass a test in order for somebody to decide if they can be a teacher. They already have to take enough tests before they get into the classroom anyway."

Vincent Harrison, college student: "No, teachers should not have to pass tests. Besides, if they pass, that does not mean they will be good teachers. No one general test will work for all prospective teachers. Students in high school have to pass a competency test before they can graduate, but still sometimes they graduate and don't know anything."

Thomasene Richard, hair stylist: "Yes, I think teachers should have to pass a competency test. I don't think a lot of teachers are qualified to teach our kids. Some are not interested or enthusiastic enough to help our kids grow."

Randy Snow, who scored a game-high 33 points, proceeded to lead the Mavericks to a 28-23 halftime lead, scoring 15 first-half points.

The Mavericks opened the second half by scoring the first five points. Even worse, Clayton picked up his fourth foul as Snow completed a three-point play less than three minutes into the period.

With Clayton again on the bench, Snow went on another tear, scoring the game's next eight points to give Dallas a 41-23 advantage with 14:23 left.

Clayton re-entered the game with 10:54 left and the Smokers closed to within eight on several occasions, but they missed the front ends of seven one-and-one opportunities in the final seven minutes of the game.

Hooks led the Smokers with 26 points but converted only four of 11 free throws. Clayton was the only other Triad player in double figures with 10 points.

Mike Gabriel scored 18 points for the Mavericks, 14 in the second half.

The Smokers hit 14 of 27 free throws while the Mavericks converted 16 of 22 free-throw attempts.

The Smokers claimed third place in the sectionals and assured themselves of no lower a ranking than 12th nationally the following day by whipping the Palmetto Spinners for the fifth time in six meetings this season, 66-51.

Four players scored in double figures for the winners led by Thompson with 17 points. Hooks added 15, including a nine-of-15 showing from the line before leaving the game with an arm injury with just under six minutes left.

Rick Helms scored 14 and captain Larry Millikan hit on five of seven field goal attempts and was perfect on two shots from the line for 12 points. Clayton added eight points, making all three of his shots from the field.

Triad hit 25 of its 39 field goal attempts in the game.

The Smokers finished the season with a 20-4 record, their third straight 20-win season. They entered the tournament ranked 19th in the nation.

of the game. She sometimes cooks two full meals at a time during weekends so that, when she comes in from a hard day at work, all she has to do is warm up one of the meals she prepared earlier.

Although the two don't have any children, Moss says "we're working on it. I want to have about three or four children, at least two at a time." But since twins doesn't run in either family, that possibility is almost ruled out.

"The secret to making both things (marriage and career) work at the same time is being conscious of your time. You must use time wisely."

-- Linda Dandridge Moss

But Moss remains undaunted and, in fact, wouldn't mind an even busier nursery than twins would provide. "I wish I could have triplets. I would have them all at one time," she says.

Moss is very quiet and could easily go unnoticed in her nook at the Arts Council office on Fourth Street. "I am also a very sensitive person," she says.

In addition to working and being a wife, she is also serves as treasurer of the Community Artists Cultural Organization, a group of artists who are trying to enhance the cultural experience of minorities, and is on the board of directors of the Tarheel Association of Storytellers.

may not get otherwise," he says.

Terrence say he plans to return to Europe and hopes to eventually become a part of Ebony Fashion Fair for 1983.

"I'm a very versatile and optimistic person," he says. "That's why I prepared myself with formal and informal education. Fashions are my lifelong dream."

just trying to reduce the number of drunken drivers."

"I think that we have made a big impact on the students with the work we have been doing since October," Black added. "The adults already know the effects of drinking and driving. But now they know that we are out here and looking at the seriousness of the situation. And the parents are beginning to sit up and take notice."

Despite the hard work and the amount of time they have invested in the program, some students fear they have not been as effective as they could have been.

"I haven't made a big impact on the students in my school," 15-year-old Patrice Black said. "Basically, they don't want to listen."

She added, "At first, I was kidded by other students at school because I was taking a stand against drunken driving. But I am still talking to them about it."

Black said that, although youth her age are accused of drinking a great deal, it is not true. "We are smart enough not to get drunk and go out and drive," she said.

But 17-year-old Rodney Gwyn disagrees. "I got involved with the program because I know people my age who drink and drive and I want to be a part of the force that stops this," Gwyn said.

But students aren't the only ones happy about their work. Gail Lindsay, whose 13-year-old daughter, Cheryl, is involved in the program, said, "I'm very proud of Cheryl and the others for the work they have done and the initiative they took to want to get involved with a group like this."

"It is good to see that they are aware of the harm that alcohol does to people."
