- Guarding Against Molesters
- A molester is usually seeking sexual contact. He is usually someone with a sick mind whose behavior is completely unpredictable. A molester who sets out to attack may panic and kill his victim.
- Women are the most frequent victims of this type of criminal but are by no means the exclusive target. The best protection against the molester is to anticipate, and thus avoid, such men, and to know what to do and what not to do if your precaution fails and you are confronted.

talent to hold its own against Division I basketball teams. But what about the other sports that must meet Division I standards? Maybe if UDC dropped its football program, and put all of its eggs in the basketball basket, as schools such as South Alabama, South Florida, UNC-Charlotte and Alabama-Birmingham have, it might have a slim chance.

But those schools had a lot more resources than UDC has.

So the suggestion here is that, if UDC is serious about Division I status, its best bet is to come on into

But the classic, once a true happening in black America, has suffered from declining attendance and will be moved to Tampa for that reason, sources say. FAMU played North Carolina A&T in last year's classic, the 50th anniversary of the event.

This year's opponent in Tampa is to be Southern University.

Trope said the clubs will attack a player's intelligence, the player's physical condition and the player's ability. He said they will also compare one player's worth against another and disguise a player's salary from other clubs in the league by giving the player part of the salary in an up-front bonus.

Walker -- it is the worst at Tampa Bay. The Bandits admit they have the lowest payroll in the league.

Salary for the average player at Tampa Bay is said to hover around $20,000 a year. Tampa Bay is said to have the lowest overall salaries because it has not signed any big-name players.

Said Coach Steve Spurrier: "I can't see having two tackles who are about the same in ability and one is making $275,000 and the other $25,000. To me, that just causes a lot of problems."

NEW YORK -- Player agent Mike Trope, who announced recently that he is retiring from the business after making millions, said there are five major tactics clubs use in negotiating with a player.

Trope said the clubs will attack a player's intelligence, the player's physical condition and the player's ability. He said they will also compare one player's worth against another and disguise a player's salary from other clubs in the league by giving the player part of the salary in an up-front bonus.

the parents themselves."

Lamont Dockery, unemployed: "No, the parents shouldn't be told. What would happen if they don't want the parents to know they are getting pills? They may get in trouble with the parents if they tell, but they probably will continue to have sex anyway."

Hilton Scott, grocery store employee: "Well, they should notify the mothers so they can talk to their daughters. I don't want to know, but the mothers should know."

Ruby Epps, packaging company employee: "No, the parents shouldn't be told. There would be more young girls out here pregnant than what it is now if they called the parents."

Ferley Singletary, day care center employee: "No, not really should the parents be told. If the parents and daughters have a close relationship, the kid would tell the mother anyway. I am going to tell my daughter about sex and keep a close relationship with her."

Odell McLaurin, unemployed: "I don't know really. If the girls are of age (which he says is 16) then parents should not be told. If they are younger than 16, then the parents should be told."

Kenneth Wright, produce company employee: "Yes, parents should be told. Everybody is concerned about the effects of the pill and they (pills) could hurt somebody's daughter."

Matthew Cuthrell, laborer: "Yes, they should be told. Parents should know what the teen-agers are after as far as pregnancy prevention is concerned. But if the girls are over 18, then there is no need to call the parents."

athletics and had good grades. And I have to give credit to God for that. Because my parents were not well-educated people, I knew that the things I had done or were doing were because of God.

"Sometimes I admit that I am selfish, but that's only human nature. All I want to do is give them (parents) a little happiness to make up for all the misery they have gone through."

Atkinson, who bears a resemblance to boxer Sugar Ray Leonard, is easy to talk to and describes himself as "a very confident individual" and a proud one as well.

"I am a very proud person -- proud of my race and my heritage," he says. "Sometimes I am sort of a laid-back person, but I am not introverted."

When asked about his aspirations, Atkinson says, "To aim for the chairman of the company is an ambitious goal and one that I admit to myself when I am alone."

"I don't know where I will end up," he adds, "but my destiny is upwards. And right now I am not going to place a definite limit on my future."

"One thing I do know is, in time I will make a difference in the banking industry, whether it's with Wachovia or wherever."

As for his matrimonial plans, the 23-year-old bachelor says, "Marriage is something that I want to do, but not in the near future. Marriage is one of those things you do hope to do before you die."

or society back for the damages they cause through court-ordered restitution.

"This is part of the deal the court makes with the offenders to get into the program. They may be ordered to work in a community service organization, such as Mary did with the Council on Aging, or be ordered to directly compensate the victim of their crimes for his losses. We get nothing, however, if we send them to prison," Ms. Nesbitt said.

Clark added: "Community Service Restitution programs work. The established programs show a recidivism rate of only about two percent. These programs are turning people away from a life of crime and toward a productive life. We need more of them and more community support for them."

Editor's Note: There currently are restitution programs in our area in Mt. Airy, Greensboro and High Point.

We are strong in the field and we have a few people in the sprints. If they come along, we'll be okay."

North Forsyth should flex its muscles in the sprints. Cedric Roberts is the defending city champ in the 100 and 200 meters and teammate Pat Dobson has already run a 10.8 in dual meets this season.

North Forsyth Coach Scott Brent expects big things from juniors O.J. Bracy, last year's 9-10 city champ in the 400 meters, and Darrell Johnson, an 800-meter standout.

Meanwhile, many of Parkland's fortunes this season will depend on the performance of Kevin White, a shot putter and discus thrower who has bests of 47' 11" and 137', respectively.

The Mustangs also figure to be strong in the long jump with the trio of Joe Samuels (23'6"), Chucky Moore (21'9") and Tracey Gainey (21'8"), and high jumper Ricky McCaskill, who has leaped 6'3".

Another area of strength could be the hurdles, where Tracey Gainey and Roger Powell have done 15.3 and 15.5 in the 110-meter high hurdles.

"We intend to pick up as many points as we can in the sprints and the hurdles," says Parkland Coach Jim Moose.

"Grimley and Andrews should be the strongest in our conference and we should finish about third."
