One of those jobs, Jackson says, was as a radio jock for a country and western station -- a job he got by accident, he says, when he walked into the wrong station one day.

And as fate usually has usually proved with Jackson, he says he ended up in Winston-Salem before he knew what was happening.

"I had read about Mutter Evans, this 26-year-old woman buying a radio station," he says. "I said to my partner, 'What am I doing wrong, man. She knows something we don't.'"

Little did he know that he and Evans would meet. Jackson was working as a disc jockey in Durham when Evans happened to chance upon him.

"Mutter Evans was riding through town one day and she heard me," he says. "The next thing I knew, she had gotten me to come and visit. Before I walked out the door, I had signed a contract and tax forms."

Now that Jackson has been firmly planted here for two years now, he says he calls Winston home and has become very active in the community.

He teaches a jazzercise class that started on his air show to get more women listeners, and he coaches a pee wee football team at the Patterson Avenue YM-CA.

"I enjoy working with those little boys at the Y," Jackson says. "They need men like me to get out there and be a role model, 'cause a lot of those kids come from broken homes."

"In the 60s, you didn't have community centers," he says. "There was no one to tell you that smoking pot or drinking wasn't cool. There was no one that cared. I've made a vow to devote my time to the community."

Jackson says he thinks that because media personalities are more visible and verbal, more blacks in the media are needed in the community to help establish role models for young blacks.

"A lot of people are in this business for different reasons," he says. "I'm definitely not in it for the money, but with Winston-Salem being as small and as close-knit as it is, there's just not enough people like me who will give some time to the community."

Within The Picket Fence Club Meets

The Within The Picket Fence Garden Club celebrated its 11th anniversary recently at the home of Mrs. Roxie Baxter of Harrison Avenue.

Mrs. Roberja Cook, director of the Fourth-District of Federated Garden Clubs of N.C., shared in the celebration. This was the first club organized under Mrs. Cook's supervision.

The Rev. J.W. Gwyn, speaker for the evening, read the scripture, using the Thanksgiving season as his theme. He also reminded the group of the many things they have to be thankful for.

Mrs. Mabel Jessup was reinstated and welcomed back by the president, Beatrice Kirby.

The club also voted to give a donation to Operation Santa Claus.

Refreshments and a fellowship period followed.

Garden Council Plans Holiday House Tour

The Fourth District Garden Council met recently at the home of Ms. Louise Smith, who issued annual Christmas Holiday House Tour.

Again, the tour will be on the second Sunday in December. However, only three houses are included on the tour and all are in the same general area. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Dobson of Spaulding Drive, Mr. and Mrs. William Shouse of Jeketer Drive and Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Dozier of Carver Road will open their homes for touring. They will feature holiday decor sponsored by the Flower Niche Garden Club, The Best Yet Garden Club and the LaChenalia Garden Club.

The Fourth District Council is comprised of approximately 12 clubs throughout the city and surrounding area.

Tickets for the tour may be purchased from any of the council members.
