"Conan The Barbarian," that he studies each week. "First, I just buy them for the pictures. Then, later, I'll go back and read them," Mike says. Of his numerous, almost portrait-like sketches, singing superstars Michael Jackson and Prince are the prizes of his amateur collection.

"I think I have a God-given talent just like Michael Jackson," says Mike, commending the award-winning performer on his dancing abilities. "I have never liked to draw anything easy."

"I like to draw detail, and when I'm trying to come up with characters, instead of thinking about the real world, I just draw."

Mike is more than just an artist, though. His creativity extends to music, sports and computer technology, all of which his mother says he is mastering exceptionally well. But because the young artist is so modest, his mother intercedes to tell the rest.

"He's been playing the drums at Calvary Hill Baptist Church since he was 10," says Mrs. Campbell. "He plays football with the Tiny Indians, and for Christmas my husband and I bought him an Atari 400 Computer."

No matter how well Mike performs in other areas, nothing can turn his head away from art. And anyone who inquires about the absence of his easel is reminded that his birthday is soon.

He's looking to Hannah-Barbara, the toy company that also designs cartoon characters, to give him the opportunity to become a syndicated cartoonist, he says, while he also tries his hand at portraits and building design.

"I'll be on top one day," says Mike, "and while I'm there I'm going to be one of the greatest black artists ever."

the kind of leadership around here."

The Bison apparently decided to get rid of Taylor after a dismal 1-9 season last year, which was Howard's worst since 1962. Howard was outscored 114-241 and won only one conference game.

Taylor, however, had made it clear he was sacrificing this year with the hope of building for the future. He drew much criticism for playing freshmen ahead of veterans.

Speaking of freshmen, Taylor wonders how many good ones Jeffries will be able to find before next season. He said most of his recruiting efforts will be destroyed by his firing.

"Most of these recruits won't even come here now," he said. "They don't just come to a school; they come because of the people. And the people aren't here anymore."

ty effort, with linkage throughout the black community involving the churches, businesses politicians and educators, we could really have a powerful constituency here," she says.

Of the various places Tupponce has been in the last 10 years, she says people always greet her with the same question.

"People will ask me how do I like it here and I always say fine," she says. "And I've really stayed in some nice places, but everywhere I've been they will always say, 'You haven't been here long enough yet.'"

"I've gotten a lot of that since I've been in Winston," she says, "and that concerns me."

Tupponce says that although she's only been to a few socially oriented gathering spots, her contention is that a lot is left to be desired in the area of black entertainment in Winston-Salem. Her social involvement is presently limited to the North Carolina Black Repertory Company because of her love for the theatre and singing. But, she says, she will become a member of the major black organizations here in order to increase her community awareness and lend a hand.

"If you've got something you want to offer, Winston could be an exciting place to be," says Tupponce. "It's not Atlanta or Washington, but if that's where I'd wanted to be, I would be there."
