Disaster

If disaster strikes your home doing damage, one of the first persons to be called should be your insurance agent. You may also want to report the disaster to the insurance company in writing with a carbon copy to the agent.

"If you can get to it, take the insurance policy out. If it has been lost, your agent can get you a new copy," says Dr. Thelma Hinson, extension family resource management specialist, North Carolina State University.

When told that an insurance adjuster is visiting the site, hold off on moving or removing items or repairing damage except to protect yourself or your belongings from further harm.

You may also want to photograph the damage. The insurance company may ask you to itemize damaged items room by room and photos will help you to do so.

Some companies give a cash advance to help cover immediate expenses. This can be used for shelter, clothing and meals.
