

Shade causes problems for grass

When you attack -- or reattack -- those bare spots in the lawn this spring, make special allowances where the primary problem is lack of sunlight.

Shade can be a limiting factor in getting a good cover of grass established, suggest N.C. Agricultural Extension Service specialists.

- Select the most shade-tolerant turfgrass.
- Selectively remove some trees to let more light in.
- Prune out some limbs in the crowns of trees.

--Raise the cutting height of your lawn mower by 25 to 50 percent when mowing shaded areas.

- Fertilize the grass 1 1/2 to 2 times the normal rate.
- Fertilize the trees deeply.
- Remove leaves and other debris promptly.
- Maintain a soil pH favorable for grass.
- Be prepared to control diseases.

Finally, don't try to grow grass in areas of 50 percent or more shade.
