Live a long, healthy life

"As we get older, most of us become less active. This together with the gradual slowing down of our body's metabolism, makes it easier for us to gain weight," says Dr. Mary Ann Spruill, extension nutrition specialist, North Carolina State University.

To avoid putting on too much weight, you need to exercise and eat less. Needs vary, but women 65 and older gradually need about 1,500 calories a day while men need approximately 2,000 calories daily.

If you are really interested in good health, you will also need to exercise regularly. Not only does exercise help control weight, it increases blood flow to all organs of the body. This help's to make them stronger.

Physical activity like walking also decreases the amount of calcium lost from your bones. This delays osteoporosis, a disease in which the bones become thinner and are more easily broken. The best nutritional rules to follow are those which apply to people of all ages.
