She's An Adult Now

Dear Yolonda: I'm married, and I love my husband, but we are now separated because of some problems with my mother-in-law. But that's another story.

I was 16 when I married. Now, I'm 18 with two kids. Right now I'm on the spot because I'm in love with another man, too. I don't know what to do, or which way to turn.

My mother has talked to me about getting a divorce, and living my life like a teen-ager is supposed to. I believe I have too much pressure for me at my age.

What should I do about my problem?

L.S. in Mississippi

Dear L.S.: First things first: By marrying and having a family so young, you've basically forfeited teen life. There is no "getting a divorce, and living life as a teen-ager." Now you have to be responsible for yourself and your family.

Solve your difficulties by spending the next few months thinking about the way you want your life to go. Decide whether or not you're going to go on to school, or if you're going to be satisfied being a housewife. Try to see your life as you would like it to be five years from now.

From there, ask yourself which of these men fits into that new self-vision you've created.

What Spielberg should have learned after "1941," his big-budget comedy that flopped at the box office like a beached whale, was that there's a lot of merit in understatement.

But, as the late star of "1941," John Belushi, might say, noooooooooooooo.....

So, if you were thrilled by the snakes in "Raiders," Spielberg gives you more snakes in "Indiana Jones" -- and vampire bats and mounds of insects and gratuitous bloodletting to boot.

Don't get me wrong, though. Spielberg and his fellow wunderkind filmmaker, George Lucas, who created the character of Indiana Jones and helped devise the storyline in the sequel, impress me with their penchant for trying to make each movie special and sparing no expense in the effort.

And, as I said before, "Indiana Jones" is fun to watch. However, too much of anything, no matter how dazzling, is too much.

"Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom," rated PG, is playing at the Hanes Mall Cinema.

Next week: "Gremlins."

father and me for one of the curly hairstyles seen on so many young people today. Some of his friends have the hairstyles, but I can't see a 9-year-old boy having to get his hair done every week.

He shows me pictures of Michael Jackson and a couple of other entertainers, but I still can't see it. He's been nagging us so much about this that his father is starting to give in.

I know that every generation has its fad, and I do see some sophisticated people wearing the style, but none of this convinces me.

I think it's silly to be so concerned about hair. Am I being unreasonable?

S.Y.F.

Dear S.Y.F.: No. Since when is it being unreasonable for a parent to set standards?

Give him a reason, the reason being: I'm concerned about your hair, but I'm far more concerned about your future and the seriousness of your goals. So, the $10 a month we would have spent on getting your hair done is going into a savings account. In a year you'll have enough money to put toward a home computer or your college education. You'll have something concrete; your friends will have memories of curly hair.
