tennis. I've seen a lot of friendships develop from this tournament."

Entry forms may be picked up at Hanes Park and also are available at all area sporting goods stores.

Upshaw says the forms may be dropped off in a box in the clubhouse at Hanes Park.

There is a nominal registration fee of $3 for children and $5 for adults to enter the tournament, which, Upshaw says, helps defray the event's operating costs. Members of his organization pledge their time on a voluntary basis so that all proceeds can go toward helping various community organizations.

Competition in the tournament is broken down into eight categories with four age divisions for both males and females. The first division is for boys and girls under 14 years of age. There also is an over-14 category for boys and girls. The adult classifications include a 35-years-and-under and an over-35-years division.

"Trophies will be awarded to the first- and second-place winners in all age groups," says Upshaw. "Still, there's a lot more to the tournament than winning or losing.

"One of the most important drawing cards for the Garber/Lash tournament is the fact that it is one of the last quality tournaments of the season before school starts. There aren't really any more top-quality tournaments until the following spring."

The Greater Winston Kiwanis Club is one of only three black Kiwanis organizations in the country. The other two are in Atlanta and Washington, D.C.. The club here was founded eight years ago and it has staged the Garber/Lash tournament since its inception.

Is pay TV an option?

Louisiana State University will offer such a service this fall. Other schools are sure to follow.

Of course, it is not an easy task to pull off, but nothing worth doing is easy. It is critical that black colleges and the other smaller schools find some way to increase revenue.

At larger schools, TV and millions from boosters and alumni pay the way. In the past, neither of those options has been viable for the smaller schools.

But now that the Supreme Court has ruled that a school can market its TV rights any way that it pleases, the smaller schools must find a way to capitalize rather than grunt and groan. Pay TV would be a terrific challenge, to be sure, but well worth it in the long run

Every smaller school in the country should immediately investigate such a possibility.

What with inflation, ever-rising costs and a general lack of money affecting most every athletic department, pay TV could prove to be the only solution.

next year, "I'm turning the tournament over to the Senior Golf Association here at Winston Lake," said Jones. "I'm hoping that we can have it run by a non-profit organization so that we can get more money to expand the tournament. It is my hope that we can align it with a worthy organization such as the Sickle Cell Drive or the NAACP. That way the proceeds can benefit people and the tournament will not change. "I've worked too long and too hard to see that happen," said Jones, "I founded it and I couldn't see that happen."
