Steps to take after an accident

Would you know what to do if you were involved in an automobile accident? Dr. Thelma Hinson, extension family resource development specialist, North Carolina State University, offers the following guidelines:

--Stop the car. Never leave the scene of an accident.

--Have someone call the police or highway patrol. Whoever calls should tell how many people were injured and the types of injuries. The police can then call the nearest medical unit.

--Help anyone who is injured, but avoid moving them unless it is absolutely necessary. Covering an injured person with a blanket or coat and making him comfortable is about as much as an untrained person should do.

--Give the police whatever information they need. Ask where a copy of the police report can be obtained. This may be needed to file an insurance claim.

--Take reasonable steps to protect the car from further damage. This can involve setting up flares, moving the car off the road and calling a tow truck. Remember that the insurance company will probably want to have an adjuster inspect a damaged car before authorizing any repair work.

--Get the names and addresses of all drivers and passengers involved in the accident. Also write down the license plate numbers, makes and models of the cars in-involved and drivers' license numbers and insurance information. Get the names and addresses of witness, police and emergency personnel. vehicle or object, try to find out who the owner is. If this is not possible, leave a note with your name, address and phone number.

The problem: Now that my ex sees me happy and content, he has gotten upset and is showing his resentment towards me. He is jealous of the relationship between my boyfriend and the kids, particularly the one between my friend and our son, who is now seven.

My ex questions my son about everything that happens in this house. He has told my son not go anywhere with my friend unless I'm there too. Now who does that harm but my son? Before, my friend would take him to ball games or to the park. I don't recall his father taking him anywhere. Naturally, my son is loyal to his father. If his father says don't go somewhere, my son won't go.

I have tried talking to my kids' father but he doesn't listen. He believes that my boyfriend is trying to take the kids away from him. What do you suggest?

Dear Lenee: I suggest that you continue to try to talk with your ex. Assure him that as long as he's on his job, no man can fulfill the role that he plays in their lives.

But ultimately who you must work with is your kids. Simply explain to them that they cannot share with their father each thing that occurs in your house. Now, his life is his. Your life is yours.

Confidential To Karen A., in Rockford: Re-read the answer just given to Lenee. I hope you see the similarities in your problems. Your kids are old enough to understand that they cannot tell everyone about what's happening in their home.

Radio minister lives by faith

tunity to start a relationship with God. Only this time, she says, she intends on remaining in the faith.

"Before I was saved," says Cornell, "I had a lot of hang-ups and let-downs. I even came to the point where I might not be alive today, but God saved me and kept me so that I may show forth his praises and be able to help someone else."

Much of her support, she says, has come not only from Martin but her supportive minister, Bishop J.L. Hines, pastor of Mt. Sinai Glorious Church of God, where she is a member. Although Cornell chuckles, about it now, there was a time when her mistakes stood out over the air. But she says the show's former host, Nancy Caree Wilson, and fellow announcer Paul Johnson helped her to relax.

"Those mistakes might have cost me my job in other places," she says, "but I really appreciate the people here for being patient with me."

Cornell's popularity is growing in Winston-Salem's gospel music community, but her natural ease with radio and her gift for helping others doesn't come from just having talent, she says, but from a source greater than herself.

She says a verse from the 100th Psalm comes to mind when she begins to think about where she's come from and about her talent for offering help to others.

It is God that hath made me, not me myself, nor man.

"I've had several people tell me that they really believe God has called me into the radio ministry," says Cornell, "and I just praise God for it."
