All Dentures Are Not The Same

Many people assume that all dentures are the same, whether you pay five dollars or five hundred dollars. However, Dr. M.P. Nicholson, D.D.S. is of a different opinion. With 32 years of experience in the field of dentistry, he specializes in lower dentures and those that are hard to fit.

The laboratory work for all dentures is done in Dr. Nicholson's office at 620 Monmouth Street. The two lab technicians are fully qualified, one with 45 years experience, the other 8 years. Of course, Dr. Nicholson himself takes all impressions, registers bites and places all dentures. He also makes all adjustments in the patient's mouth.

The process of making dentures is quite interesting. Consider the fact that everyone's mouth, jaw and teeth are unique, like fingerprints.

On a particular day this week, one lab technician worked meticulously placing six interior or biting teeth and eight posterior or chewing teeth in position on a wax model of the gums. The wax fits over a stone reproduction of the mouth, made for the patient after Dr. Nicholson takes an impression jaw movement. Then the wax bite is fitted on the mold. After four hours later, the teeth have been invested with plaster, the wax boiled out and the gum mixture packed in place over the teeth. Then everything is placed in a bronze flask for the last step - packing and curing.

After the teeth have cured in boiling water, they are taken out and the teeth and gums are separated from the plaster. After a little hammering, the pink gums and properly placed teeth emerge from the plaster and are ready to be polished before the final fitting.

Arranging an upper, lower or full denture plate to fit the contour of an individual's jaw take patience and precision. "Personalized dentures required three or four appointments, as opposed to the one-day service, or economy dentures," Dr. Nicholson said. "I need more time with the patient to personalize his dentures. But the extra time is worth it to your appearance. There is a difference - usually, a dramatic one."

Dr. M. P. Nicholson, D.D.S.

Dr. Scales to lead Negro Women

The National Council of Negro Women held its N.C. State Mechanism meeting on Saturday, Sept. 8 at the Hyatt Street YWCA in Raleigh with the Raleigh section president, Mrs. Mary Mallette, welcoming all the attending sections. Devotions were led by Mrs. Elizabeth Jordan, chaplain of the Raleigh section.

Dr. Manderline Scales, the state president from Winston-Salem, presided over the business session and a memorial service was held in honor of the deceased members from all sections.

The meeting focused on the Child Watch program, which is being emphasized in all section meetings.

Scales asked the sections to concentrate part of their meetings on a parental seminar and to educate parents on self esteem, academic studies, follow-ups on scholarships, membership dues, youth activities and black history. Every section is supposed to devote a few minutes of their meetings to honor some black achiever.

Entertainment was furnished by Apollo Heights, followed by a fashion show.

During lunch, Mrs. Pheon Beal, coordinator of the Child Watch program, gave a report on a workshop she attended in Atlanta.

State officers were elected during the meeting. Dr. Scales from Winston-Salem was elected president, Mrs. Mary Mallette of Raleigh was elected vice president, Mrs. Louise Kirk of Winston-Salem was elected secretary, Mrs. Mildred Harding of Greensboro was elected assistant secretary, Mrs. Betty Copeland from Durham was elected treasurer, Mrs. Amanda Eaton of Durham was elected chaplain and Mrs. Doris Noble of Winston-Salem was elected reporter.
