Girls' program getting stronger

Ms. Gooden. "In our rap sessions, we try to instill in them how things work together to make a person. We constantly encourage them to keep their grades up."

That encouragement paid off last year, when a Tiny Indians member was honored by the parent Pop Warner organization for her scholastic achievement.

Ironically, the first time the program pursued the "Little Scholar" award, Mateza Royal won one.

"It's always been there, but in past years we had never really pursued it," says Ms. Gooden. "We sent her grades to the national office and they in turn sent her seven essay questions which she had to answer and return. Once she did that, we were notified that Mateza had won the award."

As an honoree, Mateza was given an expense-paid trip to the Pop Warner national office in Philadelphia and a trophy and a certificate recognizing her scholastic achievement.

Ms. Gooden says the award has increased the program's emphasis on academics.

"Now that we've had one person to win the award, we would like to see more," she says. "We are urging the participants to take more of an interest in academics."

While Ms. Gooden and others in the program say they realize that all of the participants won't be "Little Scholars," they can all reap other rewards.

Ask Beverly Linville, who has a daughter in the program.

"I think it is a wonderful thing for them," says Ms. Linville. "It has helped my daughter gain a lot of self-confidence. As a result of her participating on the cheerleading team, she has become more outspoken. She's not afraid to speak in front of a crowd and I can see her becoming a young adult."

This year, some 75 girls participate in the program, more than ever before. The sky is the limit, Mrs. Gooden says.

"When the Boys' Club turned us loose, we had to face a lot of adversity," she says. "Since that time, we've come a long way. Now that we're at a permanent home, I think we can reach more children than ever before."

addition to fumbling on a quarterback sneak.

"We just had fumbleitis," Hatchett said. "We just gave up the ball in some crucial situations and it hurt us."

Still, Sapp kept his 6-2, 170-pound signalcaller in the game.

"I don't think the turnovers were really his fault," said Sapp. "They (East) weren't rushing their ends hard. Both of their ends are pretty tall and they were able to deflect the ball."

"We went to a different passing scheme in the second half with different blocking to keep those their hands down," said Sapp. "I think Dedrick responded well to what they were doing."

After winning the toss and getting the ball on its 22, North made its first turnover on its third play from scrimmage when Hatchett's pass was batted into the air and intercepted by Robbie Parker on the Viking 27.

However, the Eagles were unable to capitalize.

The Vikings got a break of their own on the Eagles' next possession. Calvin Wright jarred the ball loose from Rodney Mullins of East and recovered on the North 48-yard line. But, on the first North snap, Hatchett gave up his second interception in as many attempts. Graham caught the ball in stride and outprinted the Viking line into the end zone to give East a 7-0 advantage.

Hatchett committed his third turnover on North's ensuing possession. As he tried a quarterback sneak on third and one, the ball bounced out of his arms and into the arms of Parker, who ran it to the North 24-yard line.

However, the Viking defense stiffened, denying East any more points.

Midway through the second period, Hatchett regained his poise, marching the Vikings into the end zone. North finally reached paydirt on a six-yard strike from Hatchett to split end Melvin Palmer. Palmer, running a quick slant, snared the ball between two defenders and Hill's extra point evened the score.

North scored with 43 seconds left before the half on a 41-yard field goal from Hill and went to the lockerroom leading 10-7.

The second half turned into a defensive struggle, the only points of the period coming on a 28-yard field goal by Hill and Campbell's fumble return that set the stage for overtime.
